We are not impressed by the suggestion (which has been put forward but is not founded upon anything in the grounds of appeal) that the Bank is an aggrieved defendant because the decree is likely to influence prospective depositors on the "either or survivor" system. We cannot consider remote possibilities. The decree binds no one but the parties to it, and adjudicates on nothing but the rights of Mrs. Macdonald and Mrs. Davis in the Rs. 52,000 deposit made by Mr. Jackson. The Allahabad Bank would have had to pay the money to one or other of these persons, and it cannot matter to it directly which of the two receives the Rs. 52,000 by order of a competent Court.

We think it unfortunate in the circumstances, that the suit was not defended by Mrs. Davis, and record our decision that the appeal does not lie with some reluctance, but we have no doubt that it is correct.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 6
—Suit for declaration and rent—Rent-decree—Execution.

A suit for a declaration that the landlord is entitled to a nakdi rent and for a decree for rent is a suit for rent in the strictest meaning of the term; and Art. 6 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not inapplicable to the execution of a rent-decree obtained in such a suit simply because the landlord had asked for a wholly unnecessary declaration.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal arises out of an order passed by the learned District Judge of Gaya in an execution matter. The point taken by the judgment-debtor before us is that the execution of the rent decree is barred by the provision of Schedule III, Art. 6 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The decree holder is the landlord and at the time of the rent-suit was undoubtedly the landlord and the defendant was and is his tenant. The suit was for a declaration that the landlord was entitled to a nakdi rent and for a decree for rent. The learned Judge in the Court below has come to the conclusion that, as the plaintiff sued not only for arrears of rent but also for a declaration regarding the share of the bhoali rent, the suit was a title suit and the decree was not a rent-decree, and, consequently, Art. 6 of Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act was inapplicable. I am unable to take the same view. The suit was between landlord and tenant and undoubtedly the provisions of the Act are applicable to them. Further, the suit was a rent-suit in the strictest meaning of the term, and I do not understand why Art. 6 of the FIRM ISHAR DAS-DHARM CHAND OF AMRITSAR v. FIRM BUTA MAL-DURGA DAS OF AMRITSAR.

Third Schedule, should not apply to the execution of a decree obtained in such a suit just because the landlord asked for a wholly unnecessary declaration in the suit. In my opinion Art. 6 of the Third Schedule of the Bengal Tenancy Act did apply to the application for execution of the decree and the learned District Judge should have dismissed the application for execution.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the orders passed by the Courts below and dismiss the execution petition of the respondents with costs.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 10, 115—
Application for stay of suit—Order refusing stay—Revision.*

An order refusing to stay a suit under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code does not amount to the decision of a "case" within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, therefore, is not open to revision.

Sultanat Jahan Begam v. Sunder Lal, 58 Ind. Cas. 90; 42 A. 409; 18 A. L. J. 431 and Pandit Rama Kant v. Pandit Ragdeo, 60 P. R. 1897 (F. B.), referred to.

Petition, under section 44. of Act III of 1914, for revision of an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 8th February 1921.

Lala Fakir Chand and Mr. Devi Dyal for Mr. Anant Ram, for the Petitioner.

Lala Kahan Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs have brought a suit for Rs. 18,943.12-0 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Amritsar. The defendants contended that a suit between the same parties in which the same issue was involved was pending in the High Court of Bombay, and that, therefore, the suit at Amritsar, which was instituted afterwards, should be stayed in accordance with section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge has refused to stay the suit, on the ground that the parties are not exactly the same in the two cases and that the suit in the Court at Bombay deals also with other items and is more comprehensive. The defendants have applied for revision of the order of the Subordinate Judge.

For the plaintiffs it is objected that there has been no decision of a case by the lower Court, and that, therefore, no revision lies. This objection is supported by a decision of Banerji, J., in Sultanat Jahan Begam v. Sunder Lal (1), that an application under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code for the stay of a suit is not a "case," and that an order for stay passed on that application is not a decision of a case within the meaning of that word in section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

It was held by this Court in Pandit Rama Kant v. Pandit Ragdeo (2), that the word "case" in section 622 of the Code of 1882 may mean a particular branch of a case for which an independent remedy or a different procedure is provided in the Code. I am, however, unable to see how an application for stay of proceedings in a case can be regarded as a branch of that case.

In my opinion, therefore, the preliminary objection must prevail, and it must be held that the Subordinate Judge's order does not amount to a decision of a "case."

I accordingly dismiss the application for revision with costs.

Procedure—Evidence—Court, if can. refer to, documents other than those on record without hearing parties—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 103A, inference under, if can be drawn from khasra papers.

No Court has a right to look at any document or any papers other than those on the record without giving the parties to the suit an opportunity of being heard and of making their submission with regard to what is contained in documents outside the record to which the Judge desires to refer. [p. 871, col. 2.]

If it becomes necessary to refer to matters other than those on the record in accordance with the provisions in that behalf contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, reference to such evidence must only be made in the presence of the parties and after hearing them upon the evidence. [p. 872, col. 1.]

An inference under section 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act can only be drawn from the finally published Record of Rights, and not from the material (khasra papers) upon which the finally published Record of Rights is founded. [p. 871, col. 2.]

Babu Krishna Kamal Moitra for Babu Sasadhar Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants. The First Court dismissed the suit and the lower Appellate Court has decreed it in the plaintiff's favour. Now, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is attacked on two grounds:—First, with regard to the procedure adopted by the learned Judge and, secondly, with regard to his findings as to title which are said to be defective. It is not necessary for us to deal with the second point because we think that the procedure adopted by the learned Judge was clearly incorrect and that the case must go back in order that the appeal should be re-heard by the lower Appellate Court.

Now, apparently what happened is this: the hearing of the case was concluded on the 3rd February 1920 and judgment was reserved. When the learned Judge came to consider his judgment he found some difficulty apparently in arriving at a conclusion upon the materials on the record and, accordingly, he sent for, in the absence of the parties, the khasra papers, and looking at the papers he came to certain conclusions which were contrary to the entries as appearing in the Record of Rights. Thus apparently he has drawn an inference in favour of the plaintiffs and adverse to the defendants from what he has found in these khasra papers. Now, it seems to us that he was clearly wrong in the procedure which he adopted. Assuming, as is suggested, that resource might be had to the khasra papers the learned Judge certainly, before arriving at the conclusion at which he arrived, should have allowed the defendants an opportunity of being heard with regard to the conclusions which the Judge was prepared to draw from khasra papers. No Court has a right to look at any document or any papers other than those on the record unless he gives to the parties to the suit an opportunity of being heard and making their submissions with regard to what is contained in documents outside the record to which the Judge desires to refer. We think there is no doubt that the whole judgment has been coloured by what the learned Judge has found in the khasra papers.

Then, again, it seems to us that he was certainly wrong in drawing the inference which he did from these papers. The inference under section 103A of the Tenancy Act can only be drawn from the finally published Record of Rights, and not from the material upon which the finally settled Record of Rights is founded.

On behalf of the respondents we were urged to say that, even apart from the irregularity above-mentioned, there was evidence on the record from which the learned Judge could arrive at the decision at which he arrived. But, speaking for myself, I cannot but think that he approached the evidence of both the parties with his mind influenced by what he had found, or what he thought he had found, in the khasra paper.

ALLAH RAKHIA KHAN v. KALA RAM.

Accordingly, this appeal succeeds and the case will go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the appeal may be re-heard upon the materials upon the record and if it becomes necessary to refer to other matters in accordance with the provisions in that behalf contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, reference to such evidence must only be made in the presence of the parties and after hearing them upon the evidence. The question as to the admissibility of the khassra papers will be a matter for argument before the lower Appellate Court.

Costs of this appeal will abide the result of the re-hearing of the appeal by the lower Appellate Court.

Lala Har Gopal, for the Appellants.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in suit was sold for Rs. 800 to Thao Ram by a sale-deed registered on the 11th of February 1918. On the 3rd of February 1919 Kala Ram sued to pre-empt claiming to take over the land on payment of Rs. 800. His claim was not resisted and on the 17th of February 1919 Kala Ram got a decree on condition of payment of Rs. 800 by a certain date. Kala Ram paid the money in due time and took possession. The land sold is certain kheerai land, with a corresponding share of shamilat. Kala Ram could not, of course, take physical possession of a share of the undivided shamilat land. A mutation was, however, made in his favour without objection by the vendee, and the mutation order includes the corresponding share of shamilat. The mutation was attested on the 27th of July 1920. Meanwhile, on 5th February 1919, the present appellants had brought a suit claiming to pre-empt the land sold on payment of Rs. 117-8. This suit was brought in the Court of the Civil Judge at Leiah, whereas Kala Ram's suit had been lodged in the Munsif's Court. The present appellants had not been made parties in the suit brought by Kala Ram, but Kala Ram was afterwards impleaded in the suit brought by the appellants. It is admitted that Kala Ram's right of pre-emption is superior to that of the appellants, but the appellants pleaded that, as Kala Ram had omitted in the suit brought by him to include the share in shamilat he had forfeited his right to pre-empt and his decree should have no effect against them. This contention was accepted by the First Court who gave the present appellants a decree for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 800. Kala Ram appealed to the Additional Judge, who held that Kala Ram had only by mere accident omitted to claim a share in shamilat and that the decree should be read as covering the whole of the land sold. So the Additional Judge accepted Kala Ram's appeal and dismissed the suit of the present appellants, hence appeal to this Court.

ALLAH BAKHIA KHAN v. KALA RAM.

In the heading of his plaint Kala Ram described the property quite correctly except that he omitted the words "mai hissa shamilat." The omission was never objected to in the suit brought by Kala Ram and the decree is simply one for arazi mutadawia. Construing literally, I am unable to hold that the decree covers more than the land mentioned in the plaint or that the land mentioned in the plaint includes a share in shamilat, but it is obvious that Kala Ram meant to sue for the whole or whatever land was covered by the sale-deed; otherwise he would never have been willing to pay the full price mentioned in the sale-deed. So it is obviously a case of mere accidental misdescription of the property sold. Had the vendee raised any objection Kala Ram would most certainly have made it clear that he was suing for the whole of the property. In Jasmir Singh v. Rahmatulla (1) a Division Bench of this Court expressed the opinion that in such a case no amendment was really necessary. In other cases cited in Ellis' Law of Pre-emption, 3rd Edition, pages 166 and 167, amendments have been allowed in such cases. But on behalf of the appellants it is objected that it is now too late to allow any amendments in Kala Ram's suit, that suit being no longer pending. It is urged that Kala Ram is bound by the decree, and reliance is placed on the ruling reported as Paras Ram v. Nathu Mal (2). In that case the sons of a man, who had alienated land, sued to recover the land alienated on the ground that the alienation was without consideration and necessity. They obtained a decree but, as they had omitted in their plaint to include the corresponding share of shamilat, and as the decree was simply one for the land claimed in the plaint, it was held that they had no right to take possession of the shamilat land and they were made to restore the shamilat land which they had taken possession of in execution of decree. They were, of course, not made to give up possession of the khewat land, which was covered by the decree. Now if I were to apply this ruling to the present case I do not think that I should be justified in depriving Kala Ram of more than his right to a corresponding share in the shamilat. But what the appellants want me to do is to deprive Kala Ram even of that land for which he has got a decree. Their claim is based simply on the ground that Kala Ram having sued for less than the whole of the land covered by the sale-deed should be held to have forfeited his right of pre-emption. Now, it is perfectly clear that if a man intentionally sues for less land than is covered by the sale he loses his right of pre-emption, but in cases where the error is merely accidental and relates only to the description of the property the pre-emptor is always allowed to amend his claim. If, of course, he refused to correct his error, when it was pointed out to him, he would be held to have forfeited his claim. If the vendee himself takes no objection to the error or if he raises objection too late, right of pre-emption is not forfeited: see Shankar Lal v. Dattu (3). In the present case the vendee raised no objection. The error was not noticed and so Kala Ram had no opportunity of correcting his error. I fail to see how it can be said that Kala Ram has forfeited his right of pre-emption. The error was obviously purely accidental and Kala Ram has never refused to amend it. I hold, therefore, that Kala Ram has not forfeited his right of pre-emption.

But, on behalf of the appellants, it is also urged that, even supposing that Kala Ram has not forfeited his right of pre-emption, his decree only covers the khewat land, and the share in shamilat has not been pre-empted, and so it is urged that I should at least give the appellants a decree for pre-emption of the share in the shamilat. Turning to the grounds of appeal to this Court I cannot say that any of these grounds covers the point now raised and, therefore, I decline to entertain it. I uphold the decree of the learned Additional Judge, dismissing the suit and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 28, application of—Suit by Pleader for fee based upon agreement—Fee, amount of, not fixed.

Where a suit by a Pleader for fees against his client is based on an agreement he cannot succeed unless the agreement is both in writing signed by the party to be charged and filed as provided in section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act. Rule against an order of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Nadia, in Small Cause Court Suit No. 48 of 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Brajalal Chakravarty, for the Petitioner.—The agreement here is only to pay reasonable and proper fees. Such an agreement does not come within the purview of section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act, as no 'amount' has been fixed. Section 28 applies to agreements respecting the 'amount' of payment. An agreement to pay reasonable and proper fees is not an agreement respecting the amount of payment.

Moreover, the agreement in this case is not an agreement at all, because the plaintiff is only suing for reasonable and proper fees for work done, whatever the amount may be. He is clearly entitled to reasonable and proper remuneration for work done. This case comes within the ruling in the cases of Sarat Chandra Roy v. Chandi Charan Mitra (1) and Sib Kishore Ghosh v. Manik Chandra Nath (2), where the plaintiff's suit for reasonable remuneration for work done was held not to come within the bar of section 28.

Babu Mritunjoy Chatterjee, for the Opposite Party.—The suit is based on an agreement. Refers to the plaint. The agreement alleged does not satisfy the requirements of section 28 and is, therefore, invalid under that section. A suit based upon such an agreement cannot succeed. Refers to Ishan Chandra Kar v. Ram Charan Pal (3), Kamini Moni Debi v. Khettra Mohan Ganguli (4) and Raghunath Saran Singh v. Sri Ram (5).

The cases of Sib Kishore Ghosh v. Manik Chandra Nath (1) and Sarat Chandra Roy v. Chandi Charan Mitra (1) are distinguishable. There no agreement was alleged; the suit was based simply on a claim for reasonable remuneration for services rendered.

[GREAVES, J.—The Pleader was entitled to a quantum meruit.]

Yes. The case of Sarat Chunder Roy Chowdhury v. Chandra Kanta Roy (6), goes further than this, but I am not making that extreme contention.

In the case of Raghunath Saran Singh v. Sri Ram (5), the suit was based on an agreement to pay "full legal fees," yet the agreement was held to be invalid under section 28. The present case is on all fours with that case.

Babu Brajalal Chakravarty, in reply.—There was no concluded contract. The amount was not determined, it has to be determined by the Court. No doubt the agreement for the whole case was bad.

[GREAVES, J.—You cannot approbate and reprobate.]

No. But there was no stipulation as to amount. In Raghunath Saran Singh's case (5) "full legal fees" imported a definite amount, such as would be payable under section 27 by the unsuccessful party to his successful adversary.

ORDER.—This Rule was granted at the instance of the plaintiff under the provisions of section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The plaintiff's suit was based upon an oral agreement whereby he says the defendant engaged him as Pleader and agreed to pay reasonable and proper fees for the work done. The claim of the plaintiff extends to a claim for compensation for the termination of his services, and it would, therefore, appear, although it is not actually stated, that the agreement relied on was one for employment of the plaintiff during the entire course of the work for which he was employed. The Subordinate Judge has rejected the claim on the ground that the suit cannot succeed by virtue of the provisions of section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act. Section 28 provides that no agreement entered into by a Pleader respecting the amount and manner of payment for services is to be valid unless it is made in writing signed by the persons to be charged and filed in the District Court or in some other Court within fifteen days from the date on which it is executed. But it is urged before me on behalf of the plaintiff that the agreement in question does not fall within the provisions of section 28 because it is said that as the agreement was only to pay reasonable and proper fees no amount was fixed within the meaning of the word "amount" in section 28, and the learned Vakil for the plaintiff further contends that the agreement was not an agreement at all because the plaintiff is only suing for fees that he was entitled to, I suppose he means under section 27, although it would not appear that these fees or, at any rate, all of them fall within the purview of section 27.

(3) 26 Ind. Cas. 960; 20 C. L. J. 445.

BECHARAM LAHARY V. SUDEBI DASI.

So far as the second point is concerned, I do not think it is now open to the plaintiff to say that the agreement was not, in fact, an agreement. He has pleaded it in paragraph 4 of his plaint as an agreement and the case has been argued and decided on that footing.

So far as the other point is concerned, the plaintiff has relied upon the case of Sib Kishore Ghosh v. Manik Chandra Nath (2), as an authority for the argument that where there is no fixed and definite amount the agreement is not within the provisions of section 28. But it seems to me that that case is not an authority for the proposition for which the plaintiff contends because, as is pointed out in the judgment, there was, in fact, no agreement alleged and consequently if no agreement was alleged there was nothing to attract the provisions of section 28. I think, therefore, that Sib Kishore Ghosh v. Manik Chandra Nath (2) does not support the plaintiff's contention. Then on behalf of the defendant, I was referred to the case of Baghunath Saran Singh v. Sri Ram (5). That was a Full Bench case and the suit was based on an oral promise to pay full legal fees and to engage the plaintiff as Pleader on behalf of the defendant. The Allahabad Court held that this agreement was barred by the provisions of section 28 and Mr. Justice Richards, as he then was, states at page 767 that in his view section 28 was intended to provide that all special agreements between a Pleader and his client should be in writing signed and filed according to the provisions of the section. It seems to me that if that case was rightly decided it covers the plaintiff's contention in the present application. There was no stated amount fixed in the agreement alleged and if the plaintiff's contention is right that would take him out of the provisions of section 28, but in spite of that it was held that section 28 was a bar. In Sarat Chandra Roy v. Chandi Charan Mitra (1), to which I was referred, as also in the case in Sib Kishore Ghosh v. Manik Chandra Nath (2), already referred to, there was no agreement. Consequently, clearly the cases there did not fall within the provisions of section 28. I was also referred to the case of Ishan Chandra Kar v. Ram Charan Pal (3). It seems to me that that case decides that a suit by a Pleader for fees based upon an alleged oral agreement, as here, cannot succeed because it is not a valid agreement as it is a special agreement and any special agreement is to be in writing under the provisions of section 28. I think that the true rule is that where a suit by a Pleader for fees against his client is based on an agreement he cannot succeed unless the agreement is both in writing signed by the party to be charged and filed as provided in the section. Consequently, no suit upon an oral agreement can succeed by virtue of the provisions of section 28.

That being so, I think the Rule must be

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 68—Suit by unsuccessful claimant to establish right to attached property—Burden of proof—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Transfer to defeat and delay creditors—Presumption.

In a suit by an unsuccessful claimant, brought on the disallowance of his objections to attached property by a Court of Execution, the burden of proof to establish the ownership of the property lies necessarily on the plaintiff. [p. 877, col. 2.]

Where a member of a firm knowing that the firm had failed, executed deeds transferring his property to his wife and his son, the Court would be justified in applying the principles of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, and presuming that the alienations were fraudulent, and were executed with the object of delaying and defeating his creditors. [p. 878, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Multan, dated the 29th June 1916.

Shaikh Abdul Qadir, K. B., and Mr. Muhammad Rafi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Petman, Obbard, Dhanraj Shah, Mukand Lal, D. R. Sawhney and B. N. Kapur, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts giving rise to the suit which has led to this appeal may be summarised as below.

A firm of partnership under the name "Harnam Singh and Company" was started with eight partners holding different shares. Seth Kasam was one of these partners holding a one-anna share in the rupee. For a time the partnership business flourished but it failed some time about the 7th February 1906. The firm was indebted to various creditors, among them being one Bhai Kahan Singh who had advanced Rs. 25,000 to Har Charan Singh, the managing member of the firm under five kundis dated 1st April 1894. Bhai Kahan Singh had to sue the partners of the firm. Eventually he succeeded in obtaining a decree for Rs. 16,615-13 0 with future interest on the amount decreed on the 6th May 1910 from the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lahore. This decree was passed jointly against Seth Kasam and four of his partners. In the execution of his decree Bhai Kahan Singh attached certain house property and shops, and sought to realize the decretal money by their sale. Musammât Ai Bai, the wife of Seth Kasam and her son, Muhammad Sadiq, put forward objections that the houses and shops attached did not belong to the judgment-debtor, that they belonged to them and were in their possession, and that they were not liable to be sold, in execution of the decree against Seth Kasam. Musammât Ai Bai relied upon a registered document dated the 19th February 1906, under which certain house property had been transferred to her by Seth Kasam in lieu of Rs. 5,000 alleged to be due to her as her dower-debt. She also relied upon another document dated the 21st September 1908 by which Seth Kasam had purported to transfer in her favour a house and seven shops of the value of Rs. 3,000 with the alleged object of providing for her maintenance and residence.

Muhammad Sadiq put forward a sale-deed, dated the 20th February 1906, executed in his favour by Seth Kasam transferring a number of houses in consideration of Rs. 10,000. For the purposes of this appeal it is not necessary to describe specifically the properties alienated in favour of Musammât Ai Bai and Muhammad Sadiq. These objections were disallowed by the District Judge of Multan to whose Court the decree had been transferred for execution on the ground that all the three transfers were fictitious and without consideration. The objections were accordingly dismissed on the 4th August 1913. This led to the institution of two suits, namely, one by Musammât Ai Bai and the other by Muhammad Sadiq. In both these suits six defendants were impleaded. Bhai Kahan Singh, the decree-holder, being the de-defendant No. 1, and we are concerned with this defendant alone as the others did not interest themselves in the suits and did not file any written statement. The suits were resisted by Bhai Kahan Singh principally on the ground that Seth Kasam had executed the sale-deeds fictitiously and without consideration in order to defeat his creditors, and that they were unlawful and null and void. In the suit of Musammât Ai Bai the amount of dower alleged by her was denied. Her possession over the property transferred in her favour was also denied. In the written statement filed in the suit of Muhammad Sadiq the allegation made by the defendant No. 1 was that the plaintiff was living jointly with Seth Kasam, and that the plaintiff was not in possession of the property in dispute. The two suits were tried together by the learned Subordinate Judge of Multan and were disposed of by one judgment. He framed three issues, namely:—

(i) Did Seth Kasam execute both the tamliknamas validly in favour of his wife?

(ii) Is the sale-deed in favour of Muhammad Sadiq with consideration and valid?

(iii) Was the onus probandi rightly put on the plaintiffs?

The decision of these issues was given against the plaintiffs and the suits were dismissed on the 29th of June 1916.

Two appeals were preferred against the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge, namely, First Appeal No. 2008 of 1916 preferred by Muhammad Sadiq and the First Appeal No. 2009 of 1916 by Musammât Ai Bai. Both these appeals have been argued together before us and, like the Court of first instance, we considered it convenient to dispose of both of them by one judgment.

In order to understand the true nature of the dispute it is necessary to give previous history of the firm "Harnam Singh and Company," the failure of which is said to have led to the execution of the deeds, which are now challenged as being fictitious and fraudulent. From the evidence of Mr. Ganpat Rai, Barrister-at-Law, who was one of the partners, it appears that the failure of the firm was communicated to him on the 7th of February 1906. On the 17th of February a meeting was held at the house of Pandit Shgo Narain in Lahore. Seth Kasam was present in the meeting. Seth Kasam then knew thoroughly well that the firm had failed, and he talked to creditors of a remission. The meeting started at about mid-day and in the evening Seth Kasam left saying that he felt pain in his stomach. He professedly left for Faqir Iftikhar-ud-Din's house, and the meeting continued for about an hour after his departure. The meeting was adjourned till the next day, i. e., the 18th February 1906 and it was again held on that date; but Seth Kasam did not attend this meeting. On the 19th and 20th February 1906 he executed the sale-deed in favour of his son, Muhammad Sadiq and the deed of transfer in lieu of dower in favour of his wife Musammât Ai Bai. Sardar Uddham Singh, Lala Harkishen Lal, were also examined on the point and they corroborated the evidence given by Mr. Ganpat Rai. The evidence further shows that Seth Kasam made other transfers also in favour of his friends and relations about the same time. In a case like this, where the objections as to the attached properties have been disallowed by the Execution Court, the burden of proof to establish the ownership of the property would lie necessarily on the plaintiff. In this case particularly the circumstances are so strong that the burden of proving the allegations in the plaint lies even more heavily upon the plaintiffs.

The learned Subordinate Judge unnecessarily framed an issue on the question of the execution of the documents relied upon by the two plaintiffs, because their execution was admitted in paragraph 3 of the jawab-i-dāwa filed by the defendant No. 1 in the two cases. Their execution being admitted they were challenged only on the ground of their being fraudulent, fictitious and without consideration.

As regards the deed dated the 19th February 1906 in favour of Musammât Ai Bai it was necessary for her to establish that there was consideration for it and the property alienated had been transferred to her bona fide. The evidence on the point is not only meagre, but valueless in the eye of the law. The evidence as to the amount of dower given by Mir Hassan is clearly hearsay. Musammât Ai Bai is stated to have gone to him and to have requested him to get Seth Kasam to pay her dower, the amount of which was stated to be Rs. 5,000 by her. This was the only information which this witness had on the point of Musammāt Ai Bai's dower. This was a statement made by the plaintiff, Musammāt Ai Bai, herself, in her own favour. She is not entitled to rely on an admission made by herself. The evidence of Muhammad does not possess any greater value. According to him Muhammad Sadiq, son of Musammāt Ai Bai, had gone to him and had requested him to persuade Seth Kasam to pay to Musammāt Ai Bai Rs. 5,000, the dower-debt due to her. This is hearsay evidence and inadmissible.

Nur Muhammad was examined by commission, and as to the amount of dower of Musammāt Ai Bai he stated that he had learnt from his father and grandmother and other relations that the mehr (dower) of Musammāt Ai Bai in her marriage with Seth Kasam was fixed at Rs. 5,000. This is also hearsay evidence and possesses no value. Therefore, practically, there was no evidence before the Court below on the question of the alleged dower of Musammāt Ai Bai. The Court below was right in holding that the document, dated 19th February 1903, in favour of Musammāt Ai Bai was without consideration. Seth Kasam was so situated at the time that the conclusion as to the sale-deed being fraudulent and executed with the object of defeating his creditor is irresistible. The liability of the partners of the firm "Harnam Singh and Company," according to the evidence, was almost Rs. 4,00,000. The creditors were clamouring for their claims. The affairs of the Company were clearly disclosed in the meeting of the 19th February 1906. The conduct of Seth Kasam in leaving the meeting abruptly on the pretext of pain in the stomach and then only two days after executing the two deeds in favour of his wife and son, leaves no possible doubt as to his intention.

As regards possession over the property conveyed, numerous receipts have been put in showing that Municipal taxes were paid by Musammāt Ai Bai. On the other hand, evidence has been called on behalf of the defendant to show that Seth Kasam all along remained in possession of the transferred property and let out the houses to tenants himself though purporting to act on behalf of his wife. If the transfer was fraudulent, as we find it to be, it was only to be expected from a fraudulent transferor to adopt means to show the reality of the transaction. We do not believe that Musammāt Ai Bai was never placed in exclusive possession of the property transferred under the deed dated the 19th February 1906.

As regards tamliknama, dated the 21st September 1908, it is enough to say that there was no reason why Seth Kasam should have made up his mind suddenly to provide for the maintenance and residence of Musammāt Ai Bai with whom, according to his own admission, he had not been on good terms ever since the year 1905. The circumstances disclosed by the evidence on the record lead us to the conclusion that this document also must have been executed with the fraudulent object of defeating and delaying his creditors. Applying the principles of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act the Court may presume that the alienation was fraudulent. The circumstances are so strong in this case that it is not possible to come to any other conclusion. The issue No. 2 related to the sale-deed in favour of Muhammad Sadiq and raised the question whether it was for consideration and valid. The execution of this deed was also admitted by the defendant No. 1, but it was challenged on the ground of want of consideration, and that it had been fraudulently executed to defeat the creditors. The learned Subordinate Judge was not right in holding that the execution had not been proved. The real question was whether the payment of Rs. 10,000, the consideration for the sale-deed, had been established by the evidence on the record. The amount was not paid before the Sub-Registrar, but its receipt was admitted before him. Muhammad Sadiq in his deposition tried to make out that his grandmother had given him Rs. 14,000 some years before and that out of this amount he had paid Rs. 10,000 to his father as the price of house and shop transferred to him by Seth Kasam.

Maula Bakhsh, witness for the plaintiff, stated that 9 or 9½ years ago, Seth Abdulla, uncle of the plaintiff, sent for him one evening, and he went to his shop where he saw Seth Kasam, Munshi Khair-ud-Din, Seth Gul Muhammad, Seth Muhammad Usman, Seth Muhammad Sadiq and Seth Ali Muhammad sitting. Some money bags were lying, which were counted by Seth

SITANATH DAS V. KANAK PROBHA DEBI.

Kasam. Seth Abdulla said that some dealings with regard to the property had taken place between Seth Kasam and Muhammad Sadiq in connection with which the amount of Rs. 10,000 was paid by Muhammad Sadiq to Seth Kasam, and some of his property in Multan Cantonment was purchased. The plaintiff tried to make out that a few days before the actual date on which the sale-deed was registered the amount of Rs. 10,000, the consideration of the sale-deed, had been privately paid to the father by son. It is difficult to believe this evidence. Seth Kasam himself has stated in his deposition that the father and son had not been on good terms for a long time. One would have expected, under the circumstances, that the son would have taken a receipt for the amount when he paid it at the shop of his uncle, Seth Abdulla. Ali Muhammad, witness, has also tried to support the statement of Maula Bakhs, and has made a similar statement.

Chandu Ram had identified Seth Kasam before the Sub-Registrar. He has been called to prove the admission made by Seth Kasam as to the receipt of Rs. 10,000, the consideration of the sale deed. The evidence is of not much help to the plaintiff. Seth Kasam also has made a statement stating the alleged circumstances under which Rs. 10,000 were received by him beforehand. For him it was simply natural to make the statement, because he himself was the author of the fraudulent deed. The rest of the evidence called on behalf of the plaintiff, Muhammad Sadiq, was with regard to the payment of Municipal taxes and apparent possession enjoyed by him. Our remark relating to the evidence given in Muramat Ali Bai's case applies equally to the evidence given on behalf of Muhammad Sadiq under this head.

In our opinion the Court below took the right view of the evidence in this case, and came to this right conclusion. We accordingly dismiss both the appeals with costs in all Courts.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Khulna, dated the 13th May 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court at that place, dated the 19th November 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Kshera Kohan Ghose, for the Appellant.—The learned District Judge is wrong in holding that my application for execution is barred by limitation. Even if it be conceded that the application of 1914 was barred by limitation by reason of its having been presented more than 3 years after the last step-in-aid of execution was taken in the execution case of 1911, but as on that application the Court rightly or wrongly directed execution to issue, it is no longer open to the judgment-debtors to say that that application was barred by limitation. That was the order of a competent Court having jurisdiction in the matter and if the order was not in accordance with law, appropriate procedure by way of appeal or revision ought to have been taken to remedy the error. That not having been done it is now too late to contend that the application of 1914 was barred by limitation. See Mungul Pershad

SITANATH DAS v. KANAK PROBHA DEBI.

Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1).

Dr. Jadunath Kanislat, for the Respondent.

—The argument of my learned friend would have considerable force if in the application of 1914 it was open to my clients to raise the objection that the application was barred by limitation. No execution was sought for by that application against the judgment-debtors Nos. 2 to 4. It was, therefore, not open to them to come in and plead the bar of limitation. See O. XXI, r. 11, 22, 23, Civil Procedure Code. Although these judgment-debtors were described as parties in the application, the practical effect was that they were no parties to the execution proceedings. Consequently, any order passed therein could not be binding upon them and they are perfectly competent to show that the application was barred by limitation. See Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhry v. Sham Lal Sen (2).

Babu Kshetra Mohan Ghose replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the learned District Judge of Khulna in appeal rejecting an application for execution. The facts appear to be these:—The decree-holder obtained a decree against Rani Durga Sundari in 1900. Execution was taken out against Rani Durga Sundari in 1911 in which year she died. Execution was again taken out in 1914. Execution was sought for against the son, who was defendant No. 1, and the grandsons, who are judgment-debtors Nos. 2 to 4, were included as parties. This application was dismissed in default. Subsequently, further applications for execution were made against defendant No. 1. The other judgment-debtors were described as parties but execution was not asked for against them. Various sums were realised. The present appeal arises out of an application made in 1920 in which execution was sought for against respondent No. 1 and also the present respondents Nos. 2 to 4 and defendants Nos. 5 to 7. The Court of first instance allowed the execution to proceed against all the judgment-debtors, except Nos. 6 and 7 who are not before us. On appeal the learned District Judge held that the application was barred by limitation. His ground for holding this was that the last step-in-aid of execution in execution case of 1911 was on the 27th June 1911, and as the second execution case was filed on the 6th July 1914, more than three years later, the application for execution in 1914 is barred by limitation, and that as execution has not been sought against respondents Nos. 2 to 4 in the former proceeding it was open to them to raise in the present proceeding the question whether the execution proceedings of 1914 were not barred by limitation.

The decree-holder appeals and contends, relying on the Privy Council ruling in Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1), that it is not open to the respondents Nos. 2 to 4 to re-open the question as to whether the application for execution in 1914 was barred by limitation. We think that the learned District Judge was correct in the finding he has come to. It is clear, nor is it disputed, that execution was not asked for against respondents Nos. 2 to 4 before 1920. No doubt they were put down as parties to the suit but execution was not asked against them, and, therefore, it is quite clear, reading rr. 11, 22 and 23 of O. XXI, that it was not then open to them to come in and raise any objection. The only person who could come in and raise any objection was the person against whom execution was sought. So far as regards the application for execution in 1914 is concerned, they could not have urged any objection because the case was disposed of in default and, therefore, they had no opportunity, even if they had the right, of being heard. With regard to the other applications for execution, as I have pointed out, they would not have been allowed to be heard on the objection looking at the terms of O. XXI, rr. 11, 22 and 23. The present case, therefore, falls within the principles of the ruling reported as Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhry v. Sham Lal Sen (2), where it has been held that a judgment-debtor who was not a party to a previous application for execution of a decree or to any order made upon it is not precluded from showing that the said application was barred by limitation and that, therefore, it was not in accordance with law. With regard to the application of 1914 it was clearly barred by limitation under the provisions of Article 182

DEWA SINGH v. GOKAL.

The last step-in-aid of execution in 1911 was taken on 27th June 1911 when the notice was issued, and this was the last step taken in-aid of execution in that proceeding.

For these reasons, the order of the learned Judge is right. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Res judicata—Suit by reversioners that mortgage without consideration and necessity—Finding that all consideration did not pass—Subsequent suit by mortgagee for possession against mortgagor, whether barred.

In a suit by reversioners for a declaration that a mortgage, being wanting in consideration and necessity, should not affect their reversionary interests, it was decided that all the consideration had not passed and that necessity was not proved. Subsequently, the mortgagee brought the present suit for possession against the mortgagor. The latter denied consideration and pleaded that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata inasmuch as the question of consideration had already been decided in the previous suit:

Held, that the suit was not barred as there was no conflict of interest in the previous suit between the mortgagee-defendant and the mortgagor-defendant, and there was no issue whether the deed was valid and binding as between the mortgagor and mortgagee.

Mr. Abdul Ghani, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In the present case the plaintiff-mortgagee sued for possession of land. The defendant denied receipt of consideration and also pleaded that the point of consideration had already been decided in a previous suit relating to this mortgage and that the present suit was barred by the rule of res judicata. The latter plea has been given effect to by both the Courts, which have followed Dhanna Singh v. Musammatt Budhi (1). The mortgagee has, therefore, come up on second appeal, and we have heard on his behalf Dr. Nand Lal.

The previous suit referred to by the lower Courts was one brought by minor reversioners for the usual declaration that the alienation, being wanting in consideration and necessity, should not affect their reversionary rights. In that case it was decided that all the consideration had not passed and that necessity was not proved. It is impossible to understand how a decision of this character can have any effect on the present suit by the mortgagee. There was no conflict of interest in that case between the mortgagee-defendant and the mortgagor-defendant. In fact, we notice that the mortgagor himself admitted the passing of some of the consideration and the point now involved could not have been at issue between them. Dhanna Singh v. Musammatt Budhi (1) is a judgment proceeding upon its own particular facts and the judgment laying down the law applicable to the present case is Thakur Das v. Musammatt Mannā (2), in which the learned Senior Judge of the Court pointed out that in the previous suit there was no issue whether the deed was valid and binding as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. The same is the position in the present case.

We accept the appeal and remand the case to the first Court for the trial of the remaining issue. Costs will be costs in the cause. Court fee on appeal will be refunded.

It is essential for the application of Art. 6, Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act that the decree must be obtained in a suit between the landlord and tenant, and that the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be applicable to them.

A decree-holder who is not the landlord can, against the will of the judgment-debtor and without the express consent of the landlord, cause a portion of his judgment-debtor's occupancy holding to be sold in execution of a money-decree even where there is no local custom of transferability.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal is directed against an order of the learned District Judge of Gaya, dated the 3rd December 1921. The decree-holders are the appellants before us and they attempted to execute a decree which they had obtained as against the respondents. The learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that the application is barred by Art. 6 of the Third Schedule of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the decree-holders are not entitled to sell a portion of the occupancy holding of the defendants. In my opinion the view taken by the learned District Judge is an erroneous one. The plaintiffs were the fractional landlords; but at the time when they instituted the suit there was no relationship of landlord and tenant as between the plaintiffs and the defendants. The essential conditions which must be satisfied in order to attract the operation of Art. 6, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act are these: First, the decree must be obtained in a suit between the landlord and tenant; and, secondly, the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be applicable to them. Here neither of these conditions is satisfied; and, in my opinion, Art. 6, Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply.

So far as the other point is concerned, the matter is concluded by a decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Jugeshar Misra v. Nath Koeri (1). The Full Bench of this Court came to the conclusion in that case that the decree-holder not being the landlord of the holding can, against the will of the judgment-debtor and without the express consent of the landlord, cause a portion of the judgment-debtor's occupancy holding to be sold in execution of a money-decree where there is no local custom of transferability. The decree-holder in this case is not the landlord of the holding and he is proceeding as against a portion of the occupancy holding of the judgment-debtor.

I would allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below, and direct that the execution do proceed.

Restitution of conjugal rights—Decree, manner of enforcing—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), provisions of, inapplicable.

The provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act should not be put in force in order to enable a husband to get possession of the person of his wife. [p. 888, col 2.]

Where a husband obtains a decree for restitution of conjugal rights against his wife, who is under the age of 18 years, his remedy to enforce the decree is by applying for execution of the same, and not by means of an application under the Guardians and Wards Act to be appointed the guardian of the person of his wife, especially where there is no necessity for the appointment of a guardian.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Muzaffargarh, dated the 13th May 1920.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. Har Gopal for Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffargarh appointing Girdhari Ram, respondent, guardian of Musammat Sitan Bai, his wife, under the Guardians and Wards Act. Musammat Sitan Bai is 16 years of age, and a decree has been passed against her in favour of Girdhari Ram for restitution of conjugal rights. Girdhari Ram sought to execute this decree by the imprisonment of his wife but the Subordinate Judge rejected his application and ordered that the decree should not be enforced by imprisonment of the girl till she attains the age of 18. This order was set aside by the District Judge to the extent that the latter officer ordered that Girdhari Ram could make another application, if so advised, for enforcement of his decree by imprisonment. Instead of doing this, he has applied to be appointed guardian of the person of Musammat Sitan Bai and has been so appointed.

It is contended in appeal that there was no necessity to appoint any guardian of Musammat Sitan Bai who has been living with her grandmother Musammat Asi Bai for many years, that the object of the respondent is merely to obtain possession of the person of his wife and that the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act are not intended to apply to a case of this sort, and should not be enforced to enable a husband to get possession of his wife which he has failed to do by execution of the decree obtained by him for restitution of conjugal rights. No doubt, the lower Court is right in its view that, according to Hindu Law a husband is the legal guardian of the person of his wife, but the question is whether there is any necessity for appointing a guardian of the person of Musammat Sitan Bai. Previously her father, Hira Nand, was appointed her guardian but the appointment was set aside on appeal by the Chief Court on the 9th February 1916 in Civil Appeal No. 429 of 1913. At that time the minor was living with Musammat Asi Bai and has apparently been living with her ever since. It was held then that there was no necessity to appoint any guardian and I see no necessity for any such appointment now. I also do not think that the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act should be put in force in order to enable a husband to get possession of the person of his wife. Girdhari Ram has got a decree against her for restitution of conjugal rights and this decree can be enforced by filing an application for execution, and it will be for the Executing Court to decide whether it should be enforced by imprisonment of the wife or not.

I accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, dismiss Girdhari Ram's application. There will be no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 10
—Security for costs, appeal dismissed for failure to furnish—Court, power of, to extend time for furnishing security.

Where an appeal has been rejected on account of the appellants' failure to furnish security for costs within the time allowed by the Court, it is not open to the Court rejecting the appeal to extend the time for giving security. The appeal having been finally disposed of, no extension of time can be granted for doing any act relating to the appeal. [p 884, col. 2.]

Rule against an order of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Howrah, in Title Appeal No. 110 of 1921.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmatha Nath Ganguly, for the Petitioners.—The Rule was obtained against an order dismissing an appeal under O. XLI, r. 10, for failure to deposit costs of suit. The facts shortly are these. We brought a suit to set aside a sale of a certain house against defendants-opposite parties. The first Court dismissed the suit. We appealed and at the instance of the respondents we were directed by the Appellate Court to furnish security for costs. We could not deposit the security in time and the appeal was dismissed. We then applied for restoration of the appeal. That application has been rejected. We put in a mortgage-bond as security for costs which was refused. I submit under the circumstances the learned Judge was wrong in dismissing the appeal. Refers to Palmabati Dasi v. Rasik Lal Dhar (1), Badri Narain v. Sheo Koer (2), Balwant Singh v. Daulat Singh (3) and Jumnabai v. Visondas (4).

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitler (with him Babu Haradhone Chatterjee), for the Opposite Parties, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was granted at the instance of the petitioners, the appellants, against an order of the Additional District Judge of Howrah of the 21st July 1921 refusing to restore an appeal. Shortly, the material facts are as follows:—The present applicants were plaintiffs in a suit to set aside a sale by them of a certain house property to one Narendra Nath Roy, their allegation being that they executed the document conveying the house to Narendra thinking that it was a mortgage and not a conveyance. The suit was heard and the Court disbelieved the story of the present petitioners, the plaintiffs in the suit. The present petitioners preferred an appeal against the decree dismissing their suit, and thereupon the respondents applied for an order that they should give security for costs. An order was made directing security to be given by the petitioners for costs in a sum of Rs. 300. We are satisfied from the order-sheet that on this occasion the petitioners were represented by a Pleader. The security was not given within the time ordered and on the 25th June 1921 the respondents to the appeal applied for dismissal of the appeal. The appellants' Pleader said that his clients intended to apply for further time within which to give the security and thereupon, as I suppose, the Judge was not satisfied that there was really to be a genuine application, he rejected the petitioners' application. Then, on the 21st July, an application was made to the District Judge to restore the appeal. The Judge refused the application saying that he did not know under what provisions of law the application was made. We think the order of the 21st July was perfectly right. By the order dated the 25th June the District Judge had rejected the appeal and consequently on the 21st July he had no jurisdiction remaining him to extend the time for giving security having regard to the fact that he had rejected the appeal. The learned Vakil for the petitioners relied on the case of Balwant Singh v. Daulat Singh (3). But in that case the Judicial Committee found it very difficult to understand exactly what order was made by the High Court and as we read the decision, it is not a decision that, in circumstances similar to the present, namely, where an appeal has been rejected an order can subsequently be made extending the time for giving security, all that the Judicial Committee did was in the uncertain state of things in the exercise of their own power to restore the appeal. It does not seem to us that the case reported as Balwant Singh v. Daulat Singh (3) is any authority for the proposition that if the Court has rejected or dismissed an appeal it is still open to that Court to extend the time for giving the security or to do any other act relating to the appeal which has already been finally disposed of.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 66, 90—Execution of decree—Sale—Failure to state estimated price in proclamation—Irregularity—Substantial injury—Second appeal—Point taken for first time.

The mere omission to state in a sale proclamation the estimated price of the property to be sold does not amount to material irregularity within the meaning of r. 90 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code.

Saadatmand Khan v. Phul Kuar 20 A. 412; 2 C. W. N. 550; 25 I. A. 146; 7 Sar. P. O. J. 330; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 624 (P. C.), distinguished.

A material irregularity in the publication or conduct of a sale would not justify the setting aside of the sale in the absence of proof that substantial injury to the applicant had resulted therefrom.

A point taken for the first time in second appeal deserves no consideration.

Petition, under section 44 Act VI of 1912, for revision of an order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 12th March 1921, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, dated the 20th December 1920.

Lala Rama Nand, for the Petitioner.

Lala Sardha Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition to revise an order confirming a sale made by public auction in satisfaction of a decree.

The point now taken is taken for the first time in this Court, to the effect that the price of the property was not entered in the proclamation of sale.

The petition fails for several reasons. First, a point taken for the first time in this Court deserves no consideration. Second, the mere omission to state the estimated price of the property is not a material irregularity. Reference is made to Saadatmand Khan v. Phul Kuar (1) but the facts of that case differ greatly from the facts of this.

ONKARMAL AGARWALA v. NITYA GOPAL CHAKI.

In that case, there was a gross misstatement of the estimated price, calculated to mislead; here there was no misstatement, only an omission, whilst the property was visible to all purchasers who were thus in a position to frame their own estimates.

Again, even if there had been a material irregularity in the publication or conduct of the sale, that would not justify interference in the absence of proof that substantial injury to petitioner had resulted therefrom. Here there is no such proof.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

—SURETY, JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—

RESPONDENT.

Surety, execution of decree against—Surety's liability co-extensive with that of judgment-debtor—Judgment-debtor's failure to have payments certified—Surety, if affected.

A person who stands surety for a judgment-debtor is bound so long as the judgment-debtor is bound and the latter is bound so long as any payments which he may have made to the decree-holder are not certified to the Court executing the decree. [p. 886, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, such payments are not certified to the Court executing the decree, an application for execution of the decree against the surety is maintainable. [p. 886, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the Additional District Judge, Pabna and Bogra at Pabna, ONKARMAI AGARWALA V. NRIITYA GOPAL CHAKI.

dated the 11th of April 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Pabna, dated the 26th of February 1920.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta, for the Appellant.—The decree-holder is the appellant. The appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of a decree. The respondent is the surety of the judgment-debtor. The question for decision is when an execution is taken against surety under section 145 of the Code of Civil Procedure whether O. XXI, r. 2 (3) operates as a bar or not. The properties of the judgment-debtor were attached before judgment and the respondent stood surety. His answer was that there was a criminal proceeding against the judgment-debtor and after his acquittal the plaintiff and the judgment debtor made up their case and a fraudulent decree having been passed thereafter he was not liable for the amount. My submission is that the surety is not entitled to set up that plea. I denied having been paid at all.

[GHOSH, J.—Why don't you proceed against the judgment-debtor?]

The judgment-debtor has transferred his properties to the surety. Refers to section 145 and O. XXI, r. 2 (3), Civil Procedure Code. Section 145 gives me the right to proceed against the surety for the decretal amount. The Court is clearly wrong when it says that O. XXI, r. 2 (3) would not apply because the surety is proceeded against. The surety is not without any remedy. A surety stands as a surety taking all the chances of an execution against him. I rely on the wording of sub-section (3) of section 145.

[GHOSH, J.—Is it "money payable under a decree?" The surety is only liable for the performance of the decree.]

If the payment had been made by the surety then the section would completely apply. But that is not the case here. My next point is that this point ought not to have been allowed to be raised on the petition filed by him by which he stated that the decree was fraudulent.

Babu Brojolah Chakraborty (with him Babu Krishna Kamal Moitra), for the Respondent.—O. XXI, r. 2 (3) does not apply. The judgment-debtor or the decree-holder is required to certify payment to Court. I was not either of them. Therefore, I could not be liable under sub-section (3). Payment or no payment because there has been an understanding between judgment-debtor and decree-holder that would amount to my discharge. I am bound only by the contract of guarantee. Therefore, the provisions of the Contract Act would apply. Refers to sections 134 5 of the Indian Contract Act. These questions could be gone into under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. Refers to Ramanathan Pillai v. Doraiswami Ayyangar (1) Motilal v. Chandrasangji (2). The surety is not circumscribed by the rules which bind the judgment debtor.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution by a decree-holder against a surety, who is the respondent in this appeal. The case of the surety is that the judgment-debtor for whom he stood surety, has paid the decree holder. This fact is contested, and it is also contended before us that we cannot take notice of any such payments, even if in fact they had been made, by reason of the circumstance that they were not certified. It may well be that the law as regards certification may not have any application as regards payments made by the surety himself,—a point, however, which we need not decide in this case, because it is not necessary. But that is not the case here. It is alleged that payments were made by the judgment-debtor and these payments were uncertified. The position of the surety appears to be this: The surety is bound so long as the judgment-debtor is bound. The judgment-debtor is bound so long as any payments which he may have made (and such alleged payments are contested in this case) are not certified to the Court. Therefore, we think that the argument of the appellant succeeds and the appeal must be decreed and the execution should be allowed to proceed. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court and in both the Courts below. The hearing fee in this appeal is assessed at two gold mohurs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 53, 75—
Gift of money, whether 'transfer'—Order under s. 53—Appeal, second.

A gift of money made by an insolvent a few months before his being adjudged an insolvent to his mistress for the purpose of purchasing a motor car, amounts to a 'transfer' within the meaning of section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and is liable to be set aside under the provisions of that section, even though the subject-matter of the gift is converted into a car.

Tankard, In re, Official Receiver, Ex parte, (1899) 2 Q. B. 57; 68 L. J. Q. B. 670; 80 L. T. 500; 47 W. R. 624; 6 Manson 188; 15 T. L. R. 332, relied upon.

No second appeal lies from an order under section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act annulling a transfer.

Petition for revision of an order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 3rd May 1921, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Ambala, dated the 9th March 1921.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 7th of October 1920, the creditors of one Ramji Dass filed a petition asking that the said Ramji Dass be adjudicated an insolvent. An enquiry was held and, on the 22nd of January 1921, Ramji Dass was adjudicated an insolvent under the provisions of the Insolvency Act V of 1920.

On the 6th, 7th and 8th of September 1920 Ramji Dass had given to Musammāt Ilahi Jan—a prostitute—sums of money aggregating Rs. 4,400 with which she was to purchase—and did purchase—a motor car. This fact was known to the petitioning creditors, and a Receiver, appointed on the 23rd of October 1920, took steps to have an injunction issued to Musammāt Ilahi Jan prohibiting her from disposing of the said car.

Finally, acting under section 53 of Act V of 1920, the Insolvency Court annulled the gift and directed the Receiver to sell the car for the benefit of the creditors.

It was held that the gift to Musammāt Ilahi Jan was a "transfer" within the meaning of section 53 of Act V of 1920 and as such was liable to be annulled under that section.

An appeal to the District Judge having been dismissed, Musammāt Ilahi Jan has come up to this Court, through Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, by way of a second appeal.

For the respondents Mr. Manohar Lal raised a preliminary objection to the effect that, under section 75 of Act V of 1920, the appeal was incompetent.

Dr. Iqbal frankly admitted that the contention was sound and that the appeal was not competent. He, however, urged that, under the first proviso to sub-clause (1) of section 75; this Court had powers to examine the proceedings and satisfy itself that the order made in appeal by the District Court was according to law. I held that the appeal failed as an appeal and decided to treat the matter as a Revision.

Dr. Iqbal argued his case at length and contended that section 53 of Act V of 1920 did not contemplate the annulment of a transaction of this nature.

He conceded that "money" was "property" within the meaning of that term as used in section 53, but contended that once the money gifted had been converted into some thing else (in this case a motor car) section 53 ceased to have any operation. The Receiver could follow the money gifted, but could not claim the car which had been purchased with that money.

The learned Advocate was unable to support his contention by any authority and I am unable to accept it as correct. As pointed out by Mr. Manohar Lal, section 53 of Act V of 1920 is practically a re-production of section 47 of the English Act and authorities under that section would apply to the Indian Act. In the present case it has been found that Musammāt Ilahi Jan was the mistress of Ramji Das and that the money was given to her by him for the purchase of a motor car.

Under section 47 of the English Act a present of jewelry, furniture, and money to buy furniture, made by a bankrupt to a lady with whom he was intimate was set aside as amounting to a settlement or transfer.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 91—Delivery to Railway Company of goods sold—Railway, whether agent of buyer—Suit for damages for breach of contract—Place of suing.

The delivery by a seller of goods to a Railway Company for despatch to the buyer operates as a delivery to the buyer under section 91 of the Contract Act.

Therefore, a suit for breach of contract to deliver goods by the plaintiff, residing at Amritsar, against the defendant, residing at Bombay, cannot be brought in the Amritsar Court, if the contract was entered into at Bombay.

Petition, under section 25, Small Cause Courts Act, for revision of an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Amritsar, dated the 27th October 1920.

Mr. Badr-ud-Din Kureshi, for the Petitioner.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who carry on business in Amritsar, have brought a suit in the Small Cause Court at Amritsar, against a firm carrying on business in Bombay for damages for breach of a contract, made in Bombay, to sell goods to the plaintiffs. The Judge of the Small Cause Court has returned the plaint, holding that the Amritsar Court has no jurisdiction. The plaintiffs have applied to this Court for revision, contending that as the goods were to be sent by the defendants to Amritsar for delivery to the plaintiffs the case is triable at Amritsar.

I agree with the lower Court in rejecting this contention. Delivery of the goods by the defendants to the Railway Company in Bombay for being despatched to Amritsar would, by section 91 of the Contract Act, have operated as a delivery to the plaintiffs, and the Railway Company would have held the goods as agents of the plaintiffs.

I dismiss the application with costs.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUL RAOF, J.—(January 21, 1922).—This was a suit for the specific performance of a contract for sale in respect of two shops Nos. 1333 and 1337 which Vaishno Das, by an agreement dated the 25th March 1917, had agreed to sell to the plaintiffs, and which he had afterwards sold to Kanshi Ram and Hans Raj under two sale-deeds dated the 29th March and registered on the 30th March 1917. According to the terms of the agreement a sale-deed was to be executed and registered within two weeks and possession of the shops was to be delivered on the day of registration. The suit was instituted against Vaishno Das, the vendor, and Kanshi Ram and Hans Raj, the vendees. Vaishno Das, the defendant No. 1, having died during the pendency of the suit, his two sons, Gheti and Brij Lal, were impleaded as his legal representatives. Kanshi Ram and Hans Raj filed one written statement in which they raised the following defense, namely, that they had no notice of the contract in favour of the plaintiffs, that a contract for sale was executed by Vaishno Das in their favour on the 25th March 1917, and subsequently two sale-deeds were executed in their favour and that neither on the date of the execution of the agreement, nor on the date of the completion of the sale-deed they had any knowledge of the contract in favour of the plaintiffs. They further pleaded that they were bona fide purchasers for consideration without notice of the plaintiffs' title. Vaishno Das filed a separate written statement and in addition to the defence set up by Kanshi Ram and Hans Raj he pleaded that the plaintiff No. 2 was not present at the time of the execution of the agreement dated the 25th March 1917, that the defendant No. 1 and plaintiff No. 1 had then entered into a verbal contract that if the plaintiff No. 2 would not give consent to the sale transaction to the defendant in respect thereof then in that case the contract for sale would be considered as cancelled but that the defendant No. 1 would give back the earnest money to the plaintiff No. 1, that accordingly the plaintiff No. 1, as was agreed upon, gave information to the defendants on that very day saying that as plaintiff No. 2 did not agree to the sale transaction it should be considered as cancelled and that plaintiff No. 1 would take back Rs. 200, the earnest money, from the defendant. It was further pleaded that the sale deeds in favour of Kanshi Ram and Hans Raj were executed after the cancellation of the contract in favour of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' right to enforce the contract was challenged on the above allegations and in the alternative it was further pleaded that as the agreements contained a condition as to the return of the earnest money and Rs. 200 as damages in case of the non-performance of the contract, the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree for the specific performance of the contract. On the pleadings the following issues were framed:—

(1) Whether the plaintiffs had cancelled the contract with the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and so the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for specific performance?

(2) Whether the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 had knowledge of the sale to the plaintiff and so the sale to defendants Nos. 3 and 4 is not valid?

(3) What relief are the plaintiffs entitled to, if Issues Nos. 1 and 2 are found for the plaintiffs?

The learned Subordinate Judge has found on all these issues in favour of the plaintiffs and has granted a decree for the specific performance of the contract in their favour.

KANSHI RAM v. ISHWAR DAS.

The defendants Nos. 3 and 4 have preferred this appeal and the decree of the Court below is challenged on the grounds set forth in their memorandum of appeal. It is admitted that the present claim was made in accordance with the provisions of section 27, clauses (a) and (b) of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877, which provides that "Except as otherwise provided by this Chapter, specific performance of a contract may be enforced against—

(a) either party thereto;

(b) any other person claiming under him by a title arising subsequently to the contract, except a transferee for value who has paid his money in good faith and without notice of the original contract."

Before discussing the evidence bearing on the various issues arising in this case it is necessary to discuss the law relating to the respective rights of the parties to the suit. In the commentary of Mr. Collett relating to clause (b) of section 27 the position of the contracting parties is thus described:—

"The general principle of this clause and its illustration is that from the time of the contract for the sale of the land the vendor, as to the land, becomes a trustee for the vendee; and the vendee, as to the purchase-money, a trustee for the vendor, who has a lien upon the land therefor. And every one coming in by subsequent and representative title, and every subsequent purchaser from either with notice, becomes subject to the same equities as the party would be to whom he succeeds, or from whom he purchased.....The maxim of equity at the bottom of it all is that equity regards as done what is agreed to be done."

The defendants Nos. 3 and 4, however, claimed exception from this rule of equity under the proviso attached to clause (b), according to which a transferee for value, who has paid his money in good faith and without notice of the original contract, is exempted. It is, therefore, for the appellants to make out that they came within that exception.

In the case of Himatlal Motilal v. Vasudeo Ganesh Mhashar (1) the rule as to the onus of proof in such a case is thus stated in the head-note:—

"Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 having contracted to purchase the property from the same defendants who had contracted to sell it previously to the plaintiff, defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were bound to show three things, namely, that (1) they were purchasers for value and (2) bona fide, and (3) without notice. The plaintiff under his contract having a prior equity was entitled to succeed. One who owns property subject to a charge can, in general, convey no title higher or more free than his own and it lies always on a succeeding owner to make out a case to defeat such a prior charge."

A similar rule was laid down by a learned Judge of this Court in the case of Hamid Hussain v. Bishen Sarup (2).

The first question, however, to be decided in the case is whether the contract for sale in favour of the plaintiffs had been cancelled and the vendor was free to sell the property to the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. On this point Ganesh Das, Dallal, (D. W. No. 1) was produced. He was the Dallal, who had brought about the contract between the plaintiffs and Vaishno Das on the 25th March 1917. Subsequently on the same date another contract for sale was executed by Vaishno Das in favour of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 in respect of the same property through the instrumentality of some brokers among whom the name of Ganesh Das is also mentioned in the written contract. This document is marked as Exhibit D-5. In the fourth condition given in the body of this agreement the following statement is made:—

"The transaction has been made through Lala Ganesh Das, Buta Ram and Ram Das, brokers."

There is no mention in this agreement that the previous agreement of the same date in favour of the plaintiffs had been cancelled. This is a very significant fact. Now Ganesh Das has deposed as follows:—

"I was the Dallal in this case. Dhani Ram was not present when the agreement was written and so he did not sign the agreement. Ishwar Das stated that the price had been changed from Rs. 6,000 to Rs. 6,500 and so he would consult his brother Dhani Ram, and then complete the sale. The owner gave the plaintiff time for two or three hours and then the plaintiff stated that his brother did not agree and I got the aura (?) from the deed-writer. I returned the agreement to the plaintiff and got the writing D-4 from the plaintiff. So the negotiations with the plaintiff failed. I wanted some damages from the plaintiff and as he gave this writing, I knew nothing else."

This statement is falsified by the Exhibit D-4 mentioned by the witness. D-4 is an entry made by Ishwar Das in the book of Ganesh Das, a translation of which is to be found at page 18 of the printed record and is to the following effect:—

"I, Ishwar Das, have made a transaction of two shops situate Bazar Kasinan, through Ganesh Das. If I get any amount in connection with the sale-deed I shall pay half the brokerage and if the sale-deed in respect of the shops is registered in my favour I shall pay the full amount of brokerage."

Instead of proving that the agreement in favour of the plaintiffs had been cancelled it clearly shows on the contrary that it still existed and that Ishwar Das had not given up his rights under it. Ganesh Das has tried to make out that he was not the Dallah in the transaction between the defendants though his name was mentioned in the agreement. This clearly indicates that he had been won over by the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and invented this story to help their case. The learned Subordinate Judge was, therefore, justified in holding that Ganesh Das was at the bottom of this litigation, that he negotiated the sale in favour of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and that there was no foundation in the story relating to the cancellation of the contract.

On the question of notice the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 examined certain witnesses. Atma Ram had attested the two sale deeds D-1 and D-2 and the agreement Exhibit D-3 in favour of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. He stated that the parties had agreed to the terms of the agreement in his favour and Vaishno Das did not state that he had sold the shops to any other person and that Vaishno Das had stated in clear terms that his title was clear.

Tirath Ram, another attesting witness of D-1 and D-2, had stated that plaintiffs' name was not mentioned in connection with this property.

Hari Ram, who was the writer of the Exhibits D-1 and D-2, stated that he was not told about the negotiations with the plaintiff.

Sant Ram (D. W. No. 5) has stated that he was present when the transaction between the defendants had taken place, his shop being close to defendants' shop and that he had not heard Vaishno Das speaking of the agreement with the plaintiff.

This class of evidence is utterly valueless and cannot help the defendant's case. If Vaishno Das in spite of the previous contract had agreed to sell the shops to the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and as it was very unlikely that he would mention the fact before the witnesses. The contract with the plaintiffs was to sell the shops for Rs. 6,500 while he sold them for Rs. 7,200 to the defendants. The receipt of a higher price must have induced him to break his contract with the plaintiffs and it was unlikely that he would tell these witnesses that he was committing a breach of contract. Vaishno Das and the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 are residents of the same place, namely, Amritsar, and they carry on business in the Amritsar market. Ganesh Das is a broker who carries on his profession usually plied in the same market. It is very unlikely that the contract in favour of the plaintiffs must have remained undisclosed to the defendants-appellants. According to Ganesh Das the contract with the plaintiffs had been cancelled. Was it not, therefore, natural that he would have assured the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 that the contract in favour of the plaintiffs had been cancelled and that there was no obstacle in their way to purchase the shops? The probabilities are that the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 had knowledge of the plaintiffs' contract. The plaintiffs filed certain documentary evidence to establish notice. Exhibits P4 and P5, dated the 28th March 1917, are receipts for telegrams said to have been addressed to the defendants. Hari Chand, agent to Lala Balmokand, plaintiffs' Pleader, has produced Exhibits P4 and P5 and has stated that the telegrams had been despatched to the defendants informing them that the shops had already been sold to the plaintiffs. This secondary evidence as to the contents of the telegrams is admissible, as the original messages had been destroyed after three months as proved by letter marked Exhibit P7 received from the Deputy Accountant

KANSHI RAM C. ISHWAR DAS.

General, Telegraph Check Office, Calcutta. In addition to this an entry in the account-book of the plaintiffs has been produced which shows that two telegrams were despatched that day. It is true that it is not stated in the entry that those telegrams were addressed to the defendants, but this evidence taken along with the deposition of Hari Chand does establish that the telegrams were sent to the defendants. In addition to the above evidence the plaintiffs have relied upon a petition marked Exhibit P6 which was presented to the Registrar on the date on which the sale-deeds in favour of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were registered. On the back of this petition there is an endorsement to the effect that it be kept in the office. This endorsement was made on the 30th March 1917. This clearly shows that this petition was presented on that date. The only question is whether it was presented before the deed was actually registered or it was presented after its registration. After mentioning the previous contract in his favour Ishwar Das makes the following allegation in the said petition :—

"I have given notice to both the persons, viz., the vendor and the present vendee, by means of a telegram. I now again inform the vendee by means of this application before you that he should not get the sale-deed in respect of the said shops registered though it depends upon his will. He himself will be liable for his loss. He may be informed on my behalf at the time of registration of the deed."

From this statement it is clear that the sale-deed had not been registered till then. If this statement had not been true the petition would have been returned to Ishwar Das with an endorsement that registration had already taken place. The fact that it was retained in the office goes to show that the sale deeds had not been registered till then. The evidence produced by the defendants-appellants falls short of proving that they were bona fide purchasers without notice. On the other hand, the circumstances of the case and the evidence produced on behalf of the plaintiffs lead to the conclusion that the appellants most probably had knowledge of the previous contract in favour of the plaintiffs. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is fully supported by the evidence on the record and the circumstances of the case, and it is not possible to say that the learned Judge of the Court below has arrived at a wrong conclusion. In the above view it is clear that it is not a case in which damages should be granted in lieu of specific performance. In my opinion the appeal should be dismissed and I accordingly dismiss it with costs.

HARRISON, J.—(February 2, 1922).—The facts being that the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 executed a valid agreement to sell certain property to the plaintiffs and on the same day executed another agreement to sell the same property for a larger sum to defendants Nos. 3 and 4, and subsequently executed and registered a deed of sale in their favour, it has to be seen whether the circumstances surrounding this second transaction bring the vendees within the definition given in section 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act and whether it is proved that they were transferees for value, who paid money in good faith and without notice of the original contract. The three essentials, therefore, are that payment of full consideration must be proved, good faith must be established and also ignorance of the original contract at the time the sale was effected. The payment of consideration is admitted, and the second and third points really resolved themselves into one, for, if the consideration was paid in full and the vendees were ignorant of the original contract, good faith must be presumed in the absence of any evidence to the contrary. The payment of the full market value is admitted. There is no doubt that the burden of proving ignorance is on the vendees but, inasmuch as they have to prove a negative and it is always extremely difficult to do so, it is in the nature of things impossible that they should produce a large quantity of clear and affirmative evidence. They set out to show that they acted as ignorant bona fide purchasers would have done; that inasmuch as both agreements were executed on the same day and the sale was registered five days later they had very little time in which to gain the requisite knowledge of the first transaction and that they received no communication whatsoever from the plaintiffs warning them of their rights. The property in question was a small portion of house property situated in Amritsar city such as is being sold every day. It was not a question as in Himalal Motilal v.

KANSHI RAM C. ISHWAR DAS.

Vasudeo Ganesh Mhashar (1) of an exceptional sale of a whole village such as rarely come, into the market, a sale, moreover, which was negotiated with the knowledge of the whole country side and in which a large number of men were engaged as arbitrators to fix the price. The natural inferences to be drawn under these and other peculiar circumstances have no bearing and throw no light on the conduct of a man wishing to invest six thousand rupees in buying two shops in Amritsar. No sane man buys litigation if he can avoid it and if, before concluding his bargain, he comes to know of there being any sort of cloud on the title such as the existence of a previous agreement to sell, the natural and reasonable course for him to adopt would be to withdraw and to look for a similar piece of property elsewhere with a perfectly clear title. It is, of course, dangerous to attach too much importance to an inference drawn from the conduct of the vendees, for if every subsequent sale where the full market price is paid is to be presumed to have been effected in ignorance of all previous agreements it will be impossible for the injured party ever to get redress. I think, however, that some value should be attached to the fact that the conduct of the second vendees in purchasing this property, if they knew of the previous agreement would have been foolish in the extreme. It is true that the burden falls upon the vendees, but when the plaintiffs deliberately attempt to prove that in two distinct methods they conveyed the information, if the vendees can show that they have not only completely failed to establish their contention but their conduct gives rise to certain suspicions. I think that the inference to be drawn from that conduct may, and in this case does, assist the vendees. The plaintiffs state that three days after the agreement had been signed they sent two telegrams to the vendor and to the vendees. In support of this allegation they produce Hari Chand, the agent of their Pleader, who states that such telegrams were despatched. He is not the man who wrote the telegrams nor yet the man who sent them, and it is not explained how he came to know the contents or the names of the addressees. The obvious persons who would know is Lala Balmokand, the Pleader, who is said to have directed the sending of the telegrams and who has not been produced—surely a very significant fact. A book of accounts is also produced to corroborate the fact of the sending of the telegrams, but this is kept in such a way as to be completely useless.

The second communication is stated to have been made by means of a notice sent to the Sub-Registrar requesting him to convey the information before the registration. The notice was produced and shown to have been signed by the Sub-Registrar. The Sub-Registrar himself was also produced and yet, strange to say, he was never questioned on the subject. Now the plaintiffs have attempted to prove that the information was given by two distinct communications and they have deliberately refrained at the last moment from producing and from questioning the witnesses whose evidence would have been conclusive had it been in their favour and the vendees, in my opinion, rightly contend that they are entitled to have an inference drawn that both these witnesses would, if produced and questioned, have said the precise contrary of which the plaintiffs denied. The vendees, therefore, have shown that they acted in a natural manner; that they paid the full market price, and that they did not receive the information in either of the two ways in which the plaintiffs say they did. What more could they possibly show? They say on oath that they were ignorant; that the positive allegations made by the plaintiffs are untrue. Only one point remains, and that is the appearance of the name of Ganesh Das, broker, together with the names of the two other brokers in the sale-deed. This man, Ganesh Das, admittedly negotiated the first agreement in favour of the plaintiffs and was the sole broker and entitled to the whole of the commission if the transaction were completed. In the second he appears as one of three and entitled to a 1/3rd of the commission. He, therefore, would be a very heavy gainer if the first sale were put through, and it is entirely in his interests to support the plaintiffs. Instead of this we find when he goes into the witness-box that he stated he had nothing whatever to do with the second sale and that his name was merely added by the brokers, who had arranged it, and he tells a plausible and convincing story to explain how it was that the vendor came to deal with the vendees. In the first agreement one of the plaintiffs only signed and the story is that this man was representing his brother, and as the price had been raised from Rs. 6,000 to Rs. 6,500, he reserved to himself the right to back out of the bargain if his absent brother did not agree. The brother did fail, and the broker thereupon did a very smart piece of business and obtained the agreement from the petition-writer with the intention of forcing Ishwar Das to pay him some part of his commission. On deciding to bring this case Ishwar Das had to get possession of this document. The broker naturally refused to give it up unless he was compensated and, accordingly, the entry D. 4 was made by Ishwar Das in which he undertook to pay the broker his full commission if he succeeded in his case and if he did not succeed in full and was awarded compensation only, to pay him half the brokerage. I see no reason to disbelieve this statement and all the more so because it gives the only rational explanation possible of the conduct of Ganesh Das. The alternatives resolve themselves into four (1) the vendor told the vendees of the previous agreement and they brought a bad title with their eyes open and subsequently bribed Ganesh Das to support them. The vendor would surely be the last person to inform the vendees of any defect in his title. (2) Ganesh Das negotiated the second sale and informed the vendees at the time that there was a good valid agreement subsisting in favour of Ishwar Das. This is open to the same objection as No. 1. (3) Ganesh Das negotiated the sale and did not inform the vendees. In this case they acted in ignorance and their sale is good. The fourth possibility is that Ganesh Das is speaking the truth and had nothing whatever to do with the second sale, and that neither he nor the vendor having informed the vendees, they acted in ignorance. This, I believe, is what actually happened. I find, therefore, that so far from the name of Ganesh Das in the sale-deed going against the vendees it aids their case to this extent that it has necessitated the telling of the true story of what actually happened. The first agreement broke down because of Ishwar Das' brother's failure to agree. The sale was then transacted. The plaintiffs realising afterwards that they had lost a good bargain, decided to bring the case, and in order to obtain the agreement had to make terms with Ganesh Das. The presence of Ganesh Das' name in the second sale is still explained. It may have been due to some private agreement between him and the two brokers who negotiated the sale that he was to have a share in business transacted by them. It may have been on account of the true broker's thinking that something was due to him on account of his having discovered the property and of their knowing that in spite of his having discovered the bargain, his sale had failed to materialise. Whatever the reason may have been, I do not think that his name in the deed tells against the vendees in any way, and I believe that the story told by him is true.

I would, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit against the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and as I find that Ishwar Das was to blame for the cancellation of the agreement I would give him a decree for Rs. 2,000 only against Gheti and Brij Lal, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the sons of the vendor, this being the amount of the earnest-money to which he is entitled under the circumstances of the case that he was given the opportunity of which he availed himself to back out of the agreement. The costs of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, I would order, to be paid throughout by the plaintiffs.

By THE COURT—(February 6, 1922).—The appeal is dismissed with costs.

TARA CHAND v. ABDUL AHAD.

Decree set aside—Auction-purchaser, rights of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 12, applicability of.

An Appellate Court can take cognizance of matters which may have happened after the institution of the suit for the purpose of moulding the relief that a party is entitled to, provided it is not based on a new title which accrued after the action. [p. 897, col. 1.]

Sethrucherla Rama Chandra v. Maharajah of Jeypore, 34 Ind. Cas. 411; (1916) 1 M. W. N. 354; 19 M. L. T. 360, relied upon.

Subbaraya Chetty v. Nachiar Ammal, 44 Ind. Cas. 863; (1918) M. W. N. 199; 7 L. W. 403, referred to.

Held, that the Appellate Court was justified in adopting this course. [p. 898, col. 1.]

A bona fide purchaser, who is not the decree-holder or any person claiming through him, at an auction sale in execution of a valid decree, acquires a valid title to the property purchased by him, which is not affected by the fact that the decree is subsequently set aside at the instance of a party thereto [p. 898, col. 1.]

Art. 12 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act refers to suits brought by parties to the decree which resulted in the sale, or by parties to the proceedings in which the sale took place, or by persons claiming through them, and does not apply to suits brought by persons who are not bound by the sale. Nor does it operate to bar a defence. [p. 898, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree will afford assistance:—

LALLU MISAR—Musammât Gauran
 Nathu Parsbad. Tara Chand. Bhola Nath
 (died in 1899)
 =Musammât Bhuri.

Lallu Misar having died, a private partition of his property took place on the 28th March 1898. At that time Nathu Parsbad was a major and Tara Chand and Bhola Nath were minors. One-third of the property was separated off and made over to Nathu Parsbad. The other two-thirds were kept joint as the property of Tara Chand and Bhola Nath, Musammât Gauran, their mother, acting for them and taking no share herself. In the property comprising the two-thirds was included a house which will be referred to hereinafter as house No. 5.

Bhola Nath died in 1899 leaving a widow Musammât Bhuri. On the 3rd September 1902 Musammât Gauran and Tara Chand together mortgaged house No. 5 to one Musammât Lachhmi. In August 1904 Musammât Lachhmi brought a suit on this mortgage claiming to recover her money by sale of the property mortgaged. She obtained a decree on the 30th June 1905, her claim being fixed at Rs. 590 realisable by sale of house No. 5. Tara Chand appealed against this decree to the Divisional Judge, alleging that he had been a minor when he executed the mortgage which was, for that reason, not binding on him. His appeal was dismissed on the 14th August 1905 whereupon he preferred a revision to the Chief Court on the same grounds. This revision was accepted on the 13th July 1906 and the decrees as against him was set aside.

On the 28th July 1905 Musammât Lachhmi had got house No. 5 attached in the execution of her decree, and on the 28th February 1906 this house was duly auctioned and was purchased by Abdul Ahad, the sale being confirmed on the 9th April 1906. Tara Chand appealed against the order confirming the sale but his appeal was dismissed on the 3rd May 1906. Possession of the house, however, had not been given to Abdul Ahad, and after the decision by the Chief Court (on the 13th July 1906), Tara Chand filed an application before the Executing Court objecting to the possession of house No. 5 being made over to Abdul Ahad. The matter was considered, and on the 3rd June 1907 an order was passed to the effect that possession was to be made over to Abdul Ahad. Possession was accordingly given to him on the 17th June 1907 and he filed a dakhlanam on the 19th June 1907. From the above it will be seen, that although the decree against Tara Chand in the suit brought by Musammât Lachhmi had been set aside by the Chief Court on the 13th July 1903 so far as it affected Tara Chand; the house had actually been sold in execution of that decree and possession thereof made over to the auction-purchaser, Abdul Ahad.

After the mortgage of house No. 5 referred to above, but before Musammât Lachhmi instituted her suit, Tara Chand, on the 14th March 1903 instituted a suit for possession of his share of the entire property left by Lallu Misar. He sought to have the private partition of the 28th March 1898 set aside and a fresh partition made. Musammât Gauran and Musammât Bhuri were parties to this suit. Prior to the institution of this suit by Tara Chand, Nathu Parshad had been adjudicated an insolvent and the properties, which had fallen to his share under the private partition of the 28th March 1898, had been sold by the Receiver and purchased by certain persons who are known in these proceedings as defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 11. These purchasers were also made parties to the partition suit brought by Tara Chand on the 14th March 1903. On the 28th April 1904 Tara Chand's suit for partition was decreed, the partition of the 28th March 1898 being set aside. This decree was, of course, a preliminary one. The above-mentioned defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 11 appealed against this decree to the Divisional Judge, who remanded the case for further enquiry on the 26th November 1904. The Trial Court, however, on the 28th July 1905, again decreed Tara Chand's suit and set aside the private partition of 1898 and the said defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 11 again appealed against this decree, which was once more set aside by the Chief Court on the 30th January 1907, a further enquiry being ordered. This further enquiry resulted in being held that so far as defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 11 were concerned, the partition of 1898 held good. Tara Chand thus held a decree for partition of the property, but this decree did not affect those persons who had purchased Nathu Parshad's property, and as it is said they had purchased all the property that had fallen to Nathu Parshad's share. Tara Chand's decree affected only the two-thirds that had been left joint in 1898 for himself and his brother Bholâ Nath. His share, in the property which was liable to partition, was thus one-half, Musammât Bhuri being entitled to the other one-half as the widow of Bholâ Nath. The execution of this partition decree continued up to 1915 without anything substantial being done. In 1915 a Commissioner was appointed to divide the property liable to partition into two shares. Abdul Ahad then objected to the inclusion of this house No. 5 in the property liable to partition, alleging that he had bought the same at an auction sale in 1906. He also claimed to be entitled to one-third of this house on another ground. On the 15th December 1905 and the 8th May 1906 Tara Chand had mortgaged one-third of this house to one Jangli Mal, who brought a suit on the strength of his mortgages and obtained a decree on the 18th May 1910. In execution he sought to have this house sold; whereupon Abdul Ahad objected to the sale on the ground already referred to above, viz., that he had bought it in 1906 and was the owner. His objection was disallowed on the 31st March 1911 on the ground that the decree, in execution of which the house had been sold, having been reversed the purchase by Abdul Ahad had no effect, and further, that his purchase had been subsequent to the mortgage by Tara Chand and for that reason Jangli Mal's claims were superior. Instead of pursuing the matter further, Abdul Ahad, recognising that the house had been encumbered at the time of his purchase, paid off Jangli Mal. His title to one-third of this house No. 5 was on the 23rd April 1915 recognised, but it was held that he was not entitled to the other two-thirds in the house.

Abdul Ahad thereupon filed a suit on the 8th June 1915 for a declaration that he was the owner of the whole house No. 5. At that time he was in possession of the whole house. A decree was passed in his favour giving him two-thirds of the house and holding that the remaining one-third belonged to Musammât Bhuri. On the 2nd November 1916 an appeal against this decree was accepted by Mr. Olifford. Tara Chand thereupon appealed to the Chief Court, when it was decided on the 6th December 1917 that Mr. Olifford's view was wrong and that Tara Chand was entitled to a half of all the property that remained. The appeal was, therefore, again remanded under O. XLII, r. 23 to the lower Appellate Court, and the learned District Judge

TARA CHAND V. ABDUL AHAD.

(Mr. Tapp) on the 18th June 1918, decreed Abdul Ahad's claim, giving him a declaration that he was the owner of one-third and, granting him a decree for possession of the remaining two-thirds as owner on payment of the Court-fee on Rs. 734. As pointed out above, when Abdul Ahad instituted this suit on the 8th June 1915 he was in possession of the whole house. During the pendency of the case he was dispossessed of two-thirds of it, on the 15th November 1915, by an order of the Court dealing with the partition proceedings. Against this decree Tara Chand and Musammât Bhuri have come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Mehr Chand, and we have heard Mr. Sardha Ram for the respondent, Abdul Ahad.

It has been urged that the learned District Judge exceeded his powers when he granted Abdul Ahad a decree for possession of two-thirds of the house. Mr. Mehr Chand contended that under r. 17 of O. VI the Court could allow but not direct an amendment, and the suit qua the two-thirds should have been dismissed when it was ascertained that Abdul Ahad was not in possession thereof. Mr. Sardha Ram contended that the learned District Judge's order was correct and cited Subbaya Chetty v. Nachiar Ammal (1) and Sethruckerla Rama Chandra v. Maharajah of Jeykore (2). In the former case it has held that Courts have powers in certain circumstances to grant a decree in a case where the cause of action arose subsequently to the filing of the plaint. In the latter case it was held that an Appellate Court can take cognizance of matters which may have happened after the institution of the suit for the purpose of moulding the relief that a party is entitled to, provided it is not based on a new title which accrued after the action. In the present suit it seems to us that the Court had power to grant the plaintiff a decree for possession in the existing circumstances. When the suit was filed, the plaintiff was in possession of the whole house. He was apparently formally ousted from possession of two-thirds by an order of a Court. It has not been shown to us by Mr. Mehr Chand that this particular house has yet been divided into three specific shares. The house, therefore, still appears to be the joint property of Abdul Ahad and such other person or persons as may be entitled to a share in it, and we, therefore, consider that the decree is not assailable on this ground and hold accordingly.

Mr. Mehr Chand admitted that Abdul Ahad was entitled to one-third of the house, he having purchased that third from Jangli Mal. Qua the rest of the house, however, he contended that Abdul Ahad had no right, firstly, because Musammât Bhuri was not a party to the suit brought by Musammât Lashmi in execution of whose decree the house was brought to sale, and further, that Musammât Bhuri being entitled to a half of this house her one-half share could not pass to Abdul Ahad under any sale to which she was not a party. As against this Mr. Sardha Ram urged that Musammât Bhuri was only entitled to a half of the whole property and not merely a half in this particular house. He contended that it was within the power of the partitioning Court to allot the whole of this house to Tara Chand and that in the event of such an allotment his purchase would be effective. We are not prepared to concede the proposition that the partitioning Court could allot this house to Tara Chand, but it has not been so allotted, and until partition by metes and bounds Musammât Bhuri has undoubtedly a one-half share in, house No. 5. She was not a party to the suit brought by Musammât Lashmi and her interests in the house could not, therefore, be affected by the purchase at the auction-sale of 1906. We hold, therefore, that the suit for possession of the one-half share owned by Musammât Bhuri in the house cannot stand.

There remains one-sixth of the house to which Tara Chand would be entitled but for the fact that his interests in this house had been brought to sale and purchased by Abdul Ahad. It was contended by Mr. Mehr Chand on the authority of Beti Kuar v. Jani Kuar (3) and Raoje Bhikaji v. Anant Laxman (4) that the learned District Judge was wrong in saying that Musammât Gauran had a share in this house when it was brought to sale and that the decree in favour of

TARA CHAND & ABDUL AHAD.

Musammât Laehhmi not having been set aside as against Musammât Gauran, the sale was, therefore, effective. Doubtless it is correct that Musammât Gauran could only claim a share when the property was actually divided up and partitioned by metes and bounds. Nevertheless we are of opinion that Abdul Ahad acquired a good title under his sale. Mr. Mehr Chand urged that this was not so, firstly, because Abdul Ahad had by his own conduct admitted that he had no claim in the house inasmuch as, after his objections had been dismissed in the execution proceedings brought by Jangli Mal, he purchased Jangli Mal's rights instead of appealing against the order rejecting his objections or bringing a suit. We agree, however, with Mr. Sardha Ram and hold that his failure to appeal or bring a suit did not amount to a recognition of Tara Chand's rights. It was perfectly clear that Jangli Mal's mortgage had priority to the purchase by Abdul Ahad and Abdul Ahad was, therefore, bound to pay off Jangli Mal, assuming that his purchase was a valid one. In our opinion a bona fide purchaser, who is not the decree-holder, or any person claiming through him, at an auction sale in execution of a valid decree, acquires a valid title to the property purchased by him, see Rewa Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh (5), Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan (6) and Mukhoda Dassi v. Gopal Ohunder Dutta (7) and Janakdhar Lal v. Mohant Gossain Lal (8). In the present case Abdul Ahad was an auction-purchaser who had nothing whatever to do with the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor. On the date of his purchase there was a valid and subsisting decree in execution of which the auction sale was held. He, therefore, acquired certain definite rights and is entitled to have those rights maintained. What he purchased was all the right, title and interest of Tara Chand in house No. 5, and inasmuch as Tara Chand but for this purchase by Abdul Ahad would be entitled to a one-sixth of this house, Abdul Ahad, as purchaser is, entitled to that one-sixth. The decree, therefore, granting him possession of one-sixth is, in our opinion, valid.

Before concluding we would refer to a contention raised by Mr. Sardha Ram to the effect that Abdul Ahad was entitled to the share belonging to Musammât Bhuri, inasmuch as Musammât Bhuri should have brought a suit to contest the sale. Reliance was placed on O. XXI, r. 92 and section 65, Civil Procedure Code, and it was contended that the suit should have been brought within one year of the order confirming the sale under Article 12 of the Indian Limitation Act. In our opinion this contention has no force. R. 92 of O. XXI, relates back to rr. 89, 90 and 91. R. 91 refers to a purchaser at an auction-sale. Musammât Bhuri was not a purchaser. R. 90 refers to a decree holder or any person entitled to a share in a rateable distribution or whose interests are affected by the sale. R. 89 refers to any person whose immoveable property has been sold and lays down the procedure to be adopted when such a person seeks to have the sale set aside. We do not think that Musammât Bhuri was such a person as is referred to in either r. 89 or r. 90, inasmuch as she was only entitled as a joint owner to a one-half share in all the property which was liable at that date to partition. In any event, Art. 12 does not prevent her from defending the claim now advanced by Abdul Ahad on the grounds she has set up, as it is well-settled that this Article refers to suits brought by parties to the decree which resulted in the sale, or by parties to the proceedings in which the sale took place, or by persons claiming through them, and does not apply to suits brought by persons who are not bound by the sale. The present is not a suit by Musammât Bhuri and, therefore, the Limitation Act does not affect her right to set up any defence that she may be entitled to make. Abdul Ahad by his purchase only acquired such right, title and interest in house No. 5 as appertained to Tara Chand, and his claim for that portion of this house, which has now been allotted to Musammât Bhuri, is untenable.

* We accordingly accept this appeal so far as to dismiss the plaintiff's suit qua Musammât Bhuri's one-half share in the house.

We maintain the decree for possession of one-sixth to which Tara Chand is entitled. As said above, it has been admitted that Abdul Ahad is entitled to a one-third in the house of which he is in possession. In the circumstances we think the parties should bear their own costs in this Court and we order accordingly.

*Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), s. 56 (1) (b)—
Well sunk by private person and dedicated to public, whether vests in Municipality.*

A well sunk as a charitable act by a private person and dedicated by him to the public must be regarded as a public place and vests in the Municipality under section 56 (1) (b) of the Punjab Municipal Act.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Amritsar at Lahore, dated the 23rd March 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 6th June 1919.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This case for an injunction arose out of a resolution passed by the Amritsar Municipal Committee to close a well in a Mohalla.

The District Judge finds that the well is not a private well, but he does not say that it is a public well. On the evidence there can be no doubt that the well was sunk as a charitable act by a private person and was by him dedicated to the public.

The well lies in a recess at the end of a lane which is a cul de sac and the recess together with the well must be regarded as a public place.

That being so, the well with its surrounding area vests in the Municipality under section 56 (1) (b), Municipal Act, and the Municipality may deal with it as it pleases, provided that no private rights are invaded.

In this case, the Municipality proposes to fill in the well and replace it by a stand pipe. And it is not for the Civil Courts to decide whether the policy of the Municipality in supplying pure water in pipes in lieu of doubtful water in wells is right or wrong.

I dismiss the appeal. No costs are allowed as the appeal is undefended.

Where a mortgagee of land is to enjoy the usufruct in lieu of interest and pay the rent to the malguzar and there is a possibility of his not being able to realise any profit in some years, if any term for redemption is fixed, the same should be presumed to be for the interest of the mortgagee as well.

Mr. V. D. Sathaye, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. S. Tiwari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The term fixed for redemption in this case is one of fifty years. As held in Jivan Lal v. Dhunde (1), a mortgagor or puisne mortgagee may redeem at any time unless it appears from the nature of the mortgage or from other circumstances that the term was created in favour of the mortgagee as well as of the mortgagor. The circumstances of this case indicate that the term was created for the benefit of the mortgagee also. The mortgagee was to enjoy the usufruct in lieu of interest and pay the rent to the malguzar. There was a possibility of his not being able to realise any profit in some years, in which case he would have to pay the rent out of his own pocket and would suffer actual loss. If he was sure of remaining in possession for the fixed term, he might hope to make up the loss in some years by the profit in others, whereas if the mortgage was liable to be redeemed at any time the mortgagor chose, the mortgagee might stand to lose by his bargain. It can, therefore, be well presumed that the fixation of the term was in the interests of the mortgagee also. The terms of the mortgage itself indicate that redemption was not contemplated before the expiry of the fifty years. The two relevant passages in the mortgage-deed are:

(1) We agree to pay the principal without interest in 50 years.

(2) After the expiry of 50 years we shall repay the mortgages and take back our land.

The first passage is admittedly ambiguous and must be interpreted in the light of the second. This makes out clearly that the land was to be taken back after the expiry of fifty years. I agree with the lower Appellate Court and hold that the suit is premature. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

RESPONDENTS.*Appeal—Memorandum not stamped even according

Decree—Appeal—Court-fee.*

The plaint in a suit for possession of land, assessed to fluctuating land revenue was rejected on 2nd January 1917 on the ground that the plaintiff, who had paid Court-fee on ten times the land revenue, failed to pay Court-fee on the market value of the land within the period allowed by the Court. An appeal against the order of rejection was preferred on 21st March 1917 on a stamp of Rs. 2. The memorandum of appeal was returned as insufficiently stamped but it was re-filed without making good the deficiency. On 7th June 1917 Court-fee was paid on ten times the land revenue and at the hearing the appellant's poverty and ignorance of law were invoked as grounds of failure to make up the deficiency:

Held, (1) that no valid memorandum of appeal was presented within the period of limitation prescribed for the appeal inasmuch as the appellant had not paid Court-fee even on ten times the land revenue which was his own valuation of his claim;

(2) that the pleas of poverty and ignorance of law were not well-founded as it was the appellant's duty to pay the fee at least on the valuation which he had himself placed upon his claim.

An order rejecting a plaint for non-payment of deficient Court-fee, amounts to a decree, and a memorandum of appeal from such order must bear an ad valorem stamp.

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Sargodha, dated the 2nd January 1917.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The action, which has given rise to this appeal, was brought by the plaintiff appellant for the possession of a plot of land. It is admitted that land revenue, which was assessed on the land, was fluctuating, and consequently the Trial Judge held that valuation of the suit for the purpose of Court-fee was not ten times the land revenue upon which the plaintiff had paid the Court fee, but the market value of the land. The learned Judge accordingly directed the plaintiff to make up the deficiency in the Court fee within a prescribed period, and upon his failure, to do so passed an order on the 2nd January 1917 rejecting the plaint. There can be no doubt that the order rejecting the plaint amounts to a decree, and that the memorandum of appeal from that decree must bear an ad valorem Court-fee.

On the 21st March 1917 the plaintiff presented to this Court a memorandum of appeal bearing a Court-fee label of Rs. 2, and it was pointed out to him that the document was insufficiently stamped. The memorandum of appeal was consequently returned to the appellant, but he re-filed it on the 16th May 1917 without making up the deficiency in the Court-fee. It was not until the 7th June that he paid the Court-fee of Rs. 108 which would be the requisite Court-fee if ten times the land revenue were regarded as the valuation of the suit for the purpose of Court-fee. It is, however, unnecessary to determine the question whether the plaintiff was right in valuing the suit at ten times the land revenue, because it is clear that he did not pay even the fee leviable on that amount within the prescribed period of limitation. Indeed, he was granted indulgence to make up the deficiency, but he did not avail himself of that indulgence and re-filed the memorandum of appeal, as stated above, on the 16th May without affixing the proper Court-fee thereto. His Counsel explains the failure of his client to make good the deficiency by invoking the latter's poverty and ignorance of law, but we are unable to hold that either of these grounds is well founded. We consider that it was the appellant's duty to pay the fee at least on the valuation which he had himself placed upon his claim and that he has been guilty of negligence in not paying the fee calculated on that basis. We accordingly hold that no valid memorandum of appeal was presented within the period of limitation prescribed for the appeal, and that no adequate ground for an extension of the period has been established. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

IMPERIAL TOBACCO CO. OF INDIA LTD. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.

January 17, 1922.

Present:—Justice Sir John Woodroffe, Kt.,
Mr. Justice Greaves and Mr. Justice Ghose.
THE IMPERIAL TOBACCO COMPANY OF INDIA LIMITED—APPLICANT

IN COUNCIL—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), ss. 31, 32, 33, 34—Agent, who may be—Agent must be in receipt of income—Indian Company, whether an agent of its share-holders resident outside British India—Interpretation of Statutes—Hardship.

Six persons, residing out of British India, were share-holders in an Indian Company, the income of which arose and accrued in British India. The profits due to those six share-holders were sent out to them by the Company, which on being assessed on the income of those six share-holders as the agent of the non-resident persons, objected that it could not be so assessed.

Held, per Woodroffe and Greaves, JJ. (Ghose, J. dissenting) that, under the circumstances of the case, the Company was neither an agent for, nor in receipt of income on behalf of, the six non-resident share-holders. [p. 903, col. 1.]

Sections 31 and 34 of the Income Tax Act (VII of 1918) should be read together and not disjointly. The latter section merely defines who may be included as an agent under the former section. [p. 903, col. 1.]

To render an agent liable for income-tax for a person residing out of British India whether section 31 or section 34 be looked at, in either case the former must be in receipt of income on behalf of the latter within the terms of section 31. [p. 903, col. 1.]

Per Ghose, J.—A Company incorporated according to law, is an artificial legal person having an existence separate from its corporators. There is, therefore, no legal impediment to a Company being agent for any of its share-holders. The relation, however, of share-holder and Company is not in itself the relation of principal and agent. [p. 903, col. 2.]

Salomon v. Salomon & Co., (1897) A. C. 22; 66 L. J. Ch. 35; 75 L. T. 426; 43 W. R. 193; 4 Manson 89; Daimler Co., Ltd. v. Continental Tyre & Rubber Co., (1916) 2 A. C. 307 at p. 356; 85 L. J. K. B. 1333; 114 L. T. 1049; 60 S. J. 602; 32 T. L. R. 624, referred to.

The agent of a non-resident person need not be in receipt of income on behalf of such person. The mere fact of agency is sufficient to make him liable to be assessed in respect of the income of the principal. [p. 904, col. 1.]

Section 34 gives merely an extension of the meaning of the term "agent" as including persons who are treated as such and who may be assessed under section 33 (1) although such persons are not really agents; section 34 should be read in connection with the preceding section rather than with section 31. Section 34 refers to cases where the non-resident person has no agent in British India appointed by himself and, therefore, it becomes necessary to find a person who should be "deemed to be an agent" only for the purpose of the Income Tax Act. [p. 904, cols. 1 & 2.]

Section 34, Income Tax Act, was enacted for the purpose of assessing the income of non-resident persons when they have not appointed agents residing in British India who might be assessed under section 33 (1). [p. 904, col. 2.]

It is a well-established rule that Courts ought not to be influenced by any notion of hardship in exceptional or individual cases in interpreting a Statute. [p. 905, col. 1.]

References under section 51 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Langford James, for the Applicant.

—This is a Reference by the Board of Revenue for assessment of super-tax against the Imperial Tobacco Company of India, Limited, as agent for some share-holders of the Company residing in England. The income arose and accrued in India. The Company disputed the liability as not being a Company within the meaning of the Act and prayed for reference under section 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act. The reference is on two points, viz.:—(1) Whether the Collector is right in holding that the Company is agent under section 34 of the Act. (2) If so, whether the assessment of the super-tax is right.

I submit under section 31 of the Act the Company cannot be deemed to be an agent because we did not receive on behalf of the share-holders. They cannot assess us with super-tax so long as the share-holders do not declare dividend. We are in the position of a debtor. Section 34 must be read along with section 31.

Mr. B. L. Mitter, Standing Counsel, for the Government.—The Company are the servants of the share-holders whose money they receive and are in charge of. The intention of the Legislature is to be gathered from sections 31–34. The Company has business connection with the share holders residing abroad whose agents they are. The Company is clearly liable under section 34 of the Act. The income of the share-holders is received by the Company and it is remitted to them by their agent the Company. Clearly, therefore, they cannot shirk off the liability in any way.

Mr. James replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—In this case the applicant Company has been assessed to super tax as agent for six gentlemen mentioned in the reference. All these gentlemen are non-residents of British India. They are shareholders in the Company and the assessment has been made in regard to the dividends payable to them by the Company. The Company is an Indian Limited Company and the income, of which assessment was made, arose and accrued in British India. The question is whether the Company is an agent for these gentlemen as defined in the Indian Income Tax Act, VII of 1918. It is their contention that they are not such agents, and that they are not in receipt of any income of the persons whose agents they are alleged to be.

The Board has held that they were such agents and the matter has been referred to us upon the application of the Company. One substantial question is whether sections 31 and 34 of the Indian Income Tax Act are to be read together or disjointly, in which latter case it would not be necessary in all cases that the agent should be in receipt of the income. On a consideration of this matter I am of opinion that section 34 merely defines who may be included as an agent under section 31. If so, the agent whether we look to sections 31 or 34 must be in receipt of income within the terms of the former section.¹

I do not think that the circumstances of this case show a receipt within the terms of the section. Though this is sufficient to determine the matter I may add that I am not satisfied that even if sections 31 and 34 be read disjointly, the Company was under the circumstances of this case an agent within the terms of the Act. The answer, therefore, to the first question, namely, whether the Collector of income-tax is right in holding that the Company is an agent for these share-holders, is answered in the negative. The second question, namely, if so, whether the Company has rightly been assessed to super-tax on their account, does not arise. A copy of this judgment is directed to be given to the Revenue Authority.

GREAVES, J.—I agree.

GHOSE, J.—I regret very much that I am unable to concur in the judgment just pronounced. I think it necessary that I should state as clearly as I am able the reasons for which I have arrived at a different conclusion.

This is a reference made by the Chief Revenue Authority under section 51 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1918 on the application of the Assessee, the Imperial Tobacco Company of India, Limited. Six persons who are all residing out of British India are shareholders in the Company. They were entitled to certain dividends for their shares in the Company, the profits of which accrued in British India and there is no question that the share holders are liable to pay super-tax on their income so derived. The profits due to those share-holders were sent to them by the Company to their residence outside British India. The Company was assessed for the super tax due on the income of those six share-holders as agent of the non-resident persons under the provisions of the Income Tax Act and the Company has raised the objections that it cannot be so assessed. The questions on which the decision of this Court is sought are, (1) whether the Collector of income-tax is right in holding that the Company is agent for these share-holders under section 34, Act VII of 1918; and (2) if so, whether the Company has rightly been assessed to super-tax on their account.

A Company incorporated according to law is an artificial legal person having an existence separate from its corporators. There is, therefore, no legal impediment to a Company being agent for any of its share-holders. The relation, however, of share-holder and Company is not in itself the relation of principal and agent. Salomon v. Salomon & Co. (1), Daimler Co., Ltd. v. Continental Tyre & Rubber Co. (2). Something more would be necessary in order to constitute a Company an agent for its share-holders. The contention on behalf of the Company in this case is that it cannot be held to be agent of the non-resident share-holders so as to be liable to be assessed for income-tax for those share holders by the procedure taken by the Collector under section 34 of the Income Tax Act. It is urged that section 34 should be read along with section 31, and unless a person receives income on behalf of another residing out of British India he cannot be deemed to be an agent under section 34, and although the Company has the income of those persons it is not in receipt of such income. Assuming that the Company is not in receipt of the income, in order to see whether the Company may be treated as agent—the provisions of the Income Tax Act commencing from section 31 should be examined. Under section 31 an agent of any person residing out of British India being the recipient on behalf of such non-resident person of any income chargeable under the Act is held liable for the tax. If he is actually an agent and in receipt of income on behalf of the principal nothing more is necessary in order to render him liable, but the tax is to be levied upon and recoverable from him under section 31 irrespective of any other provision in any other section of the Act. It is not necessary in such a case for the Collector to give the agent so liable any notice under section 34 of his intention of treating him as agent of the non-resident person, because he is in fact the agent. Section 32 refers to the case where the income chargeable is received by the Court of Wards and certain other persons. This section has no direct bearing on the present question but it is noticeable that the income chargeable must be received by the Court of Wards or other persons in order that the tax may be levied upon them. Then comes section 33, sub-section (1) of which has an important bearing on the present question. Under this section any person residing out of British India whose income accrues or arises within British India "shall be chargeable to income-tax in the name of the agent of any such person and such agent shall be deemed to be for all the purposes of the Act the assessee in respect of such income-tax." As I read this section the agent of such non-resident person need not be in receipt of the income on behalf of such person there being no such provision in it as in the preceding sections. The mere fact of agency is sufficient to make him liable to be assessed in respect of the income of the principal. Coming to section 24 it seems to me that it gives merely an extension of the meaning of the term "agent" as including persons who are treated as such and who may be assessed under section 33 (1) although such persons are not really agents; section 34 should be read in connection with the preceding section rather than with section 31. Section 34 refers to cases where the non-resident person has no agent in British India appointed by himself and, therefore, it becomes necessary to find a person who should be "deemed to be an agent" only for the purpose of the Income Tax Act and that cannot be done by the Collector acting in accordance with the provisions of this section. Section 34, in my opinion, was enacted for the purpose of assessing the incomes of persons residing outside British India who are chargeable with income-tax here but who have not appointed any agents residing in British India who might be assessed under section 33 (1). To hold otherwise, it seems to me, would be to support an anomaly that a person receiving his income through an agent in this country would be assessed, but if he asks his debtor to remit the income direct to him he would escape liability to pay the tax, a thing which this section was intended to remove. It is only necessary that the person on whom the Collector has served a notice under section 34 is a "person employed by or on behalf of a person residing out of British India or having any business connection with such person" and if that condition is satisfied the person on whom such notice has been served shall, for the purposes of the Income Tax Act, be deemed to be the agent of such person. The question whether the Company is a person coming within the description of section 34 presents to my mind very little difficulty.

The Company remits the incomes of the persons resident outside British India and should be held to have been employed to do so by or on behalf of the non-resident persons. The Company again has without doubt "connection" with the share-holders and what can that connection be but business connection? The Company itself states in its letter to the Collector that on the declaration of a dividend the Company is in the position of debtor to the share-holders. Therefore the Company also comes within the description of "having any business connection" with a non-resident person. To say that such person should also be in receipt of income on behalf of the non-resident person would be to make the enactment of the section unnecessary, because a person in receipt of income is liable to be assessed under section 31; also it would not be necessary to give him notice of the Collector's intention to treat him as agent for a person receiving income, for another would be an agent under the general law.

K. M. P. R. N. M. FIRM & THE PERUMAL CHETTY.

It was urged on behalf of the Company that to make one person liable to income-tax for another resident abroad, although he might not receive any income on behalf of such a person might, in some cases, cause great hardship. The answer to this is two-fold; (1) It is a well-established rule that Courts ought not to be influenced by any notion of hardship in exceptional or individual cases in interpreting a Statute, and (2) in order to prevent any case of hardship the proviso to section 34 has been enacted and the Collector may be trusted to give effect to any reasonable objection before treating a person as agent under this section. In the present case, however, there can be no such question of hardship. It may be observed that under section 21 of the repealed Income Tax Act (II of 1886) the tax was chargeable in the name of the agent where the income was received through the agent, and there was no provision corresponding to section 34 of the present Act. The alterations in the present Act were, in my opinion, made to remove an anomaly as I have already indicated.

I would, therefore, answer the first question in the affirmative. The answer to the second question depends upon the first and no argument was addressed on it. Therefore, the answer to it should also be in the affirmative.

N. K. & S. D. Answered affirmatively.

—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 62—Contract—Subsequent agreement after breach, validity of—English and Indian Law.

Section 62 of the Contract Act applies even where a subsequent agreement has been come to between the parties after breach of the original contract. [p. 908, col. 1.]

Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das, 15 C. 319; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 796, dissented from.

Judgment of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in Ramiah Bhagavathar v. Somasi Ambalam, 29 Ind. Cas. 449, (1915) M. W. N. 405; 29 M. L. J. 125, followed.

Per Ayling, Offg. C. J.—There is no justification for restricting the operation of section 62 on the mere fact that it would otherwise contravene a somewhat technical rule of English law. Section 62 was admittedly enacted in direct antagonism to English Law. Why should not section 62 be accepted on its face meaning in spite of a similar antagonism? [p. 908 col. 2.]

Per Odgers, J.—It is highly improbable that of these two sections, section 62 and section 63, the latter should constitute a clear modification of the English law as to the requirement of consideration, while the former should be held by implication and without any suggestion to that effect in the wording itself to import the highly technical doctrine of accord and satisfaction. [p. 908, col. 2.]

If section 62 were only intended to apply before breach, why does it not say so? [p. 908, cols. 1 & 2.]

Courts should not engraft on the plain meaning of the provisions of enactments, limitations founded on technical rules of English Law and pleading, especially in cases where such limitations are not suited to the conditions prevailing in this country. [p. 908, col. 2; p. 909, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Krishnan, dated the 7th October 1920, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in O. S. No. 224 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. G. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellants.—Section 62 does not apply as the new agreement to cancel the sale with regard to the six bales was made after breach of the original contract. See Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das (1). Section 62 of the Contract Act embodies the rule of English Law. The agreement to cancel the sale being nudum factum, the plaintiffs must succeed. Section 62 does not apply to cases of substitution, rescission or alteration after breach of the original contract.

Mr. Venkatarubba Rao (with him Messrs. Radha Krishnaya and V. Devaratha Aiyangar), for the Respondent, referred to the judgment of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in Ramiah Bhagavathar v. Somasi Ambalam (2), which dissented from the Calcutta decision.

The original contract as regards six bales was not executed and parties agreed to restrict its operation to eight bales only.

JUDGMENT.

AYLING, Offg. C. J.—The transaction out of which this suit arises took place in July 1918, a time when speculation in piece goods was very brisk. Plaintiffs sold to defendant No. 14 bales of bleached mul;

the goods were lying at the time with Muruganatha Chetty and Sons from whom plaintiffs had apparently themselves purchased them and whose shop was close to defendant's shop. Defendant in his turn sold the bales to one Amir Chand Idanmull giving him a delivery order on Muruganatha Chetty. Idanmull refused to take delivery of six out of the 14 bales on the ground of unsoundness. Defendant complained to plaintiffs, who undertook to replace them by six sound bales, and indeed defendant to take charge of the six bales left in Muruganathan's hands. This defendant did; but plaintiffs failed to exchange them for sound bales. Early in September prices fell heavily in consequence of the looting riots; and when plaintiffs subsequently offered to deliver six sound bales, defendants said it was too late. After some negotiation it was agreed that the sale contract in respect of these six bales should be cancelled. Plaintiffs took back three bales, but did not take delivery of the balance and now sue for the price of the whole quantity. The above is defendant's version which is spoken to in evidence and which the learned Trial Judge has found to be true. Plaintiffs deny any undertaking to replace the six bales, or agreement to cancel the sale in respect of them; and sue on the basis of a completed sale.

On a consideration of the evidence I have no hesitation in agreeing with the learned Trial Judge, for the reasons given by him, in accepting the defendant's story as to the circumstances in which he came to be in possession of the six bales, and as to the agreement to cancel the sale in respect of them. This would entail the dismissal of plaintiffs' claim for the price of the six bales. Vide section 62 of the Indian Contract Act.

Appellants' Vakil's main argument before us has in fact been that section 62 has no application because the agreement to cancel the sale as regards the six bales was made after the defendant had broken the contract by omission to pay for the goods delivered. For this proposition of law he relies on Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das (1).

Mr. G. Krishnaswami Ayyar assures us that this argument was addressed to the learned Trial Judge, although there is no reference to it in the latter's judgment. It rests on the assumption that there was a breach of the contract before the agreement for cancellation and this is certainly neither found nor admitted, nor is it raised in any of the issues in the case. Before this plea of the plaintiffs could be admitted, the fact of breach would have to be decided in their favour; and we should have to spell for a finding on a properly framed issue.

I do not think we are either called upon to do this or should be justified in so doing. The learned Judges in Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das (1) undoubtedly lay down the proposition that the provisions of section 62 do not apply after there has been a breach of the original contract. But with all respect I fail to see any justification for this restriction of the operation of the section on the mere fact that it would otherwise contravene a somewhat technical rule of English Law. Section 63 was admittedly enacted in direct antagonism to English Law. Why should not section 62 be accepted on its face meaning in spite of a similar antagonism? I agree in this connection with the remarks of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in Ramiah Bhagavathar v. Somasi Ambalam (2).

The present case at the time of the alleged cancellation was eminently one for amicable settlement. Plaintiffs were presumably urging that defendant had received goods according to contract and was bound to pay for them. Defendant was similarly complaining that plaintiffs had neither delivered proper goods in the first instance nor replaced them within a reasonable time as promised. Whether the six bales were, as a matter of fact, sound or unsound was a somewhat moot point depending on alleged defect in packing. In such circumstances it seems to me both reasonable and desirable that the parties should be allowed to cancel the contract as far as these bales are concerned. Section 62 on the face of it allows them to do so; and unless compelled by stronger authority or reasoning, I see no reason to decline to give effect to it.

I, therefore, agree with the learned Trial Judge's rejection of plaintiffs' claim.

The only other point argued is as to costs in relation to the sum of Rs. 1,040 to which defendant admitted plaintiffs' claim and which defendant discharged out of Court. I see no reason to interfere with the Trial Judge's discretion as to awarding proportionate costs on this sum.

K. M. P. R. N. M. FIRM v. THE PERUMAL CHETTY.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

ODGERS, J.—This is a suit for the recovery of the balance of the price of 14 bales of piece-goods sold by plaintiffs to defendant on 23rd July 1918. The defendant admitted by his written statement that a sum of Rs. 1,040-20 was due to the plaintiffs as balance of price of 8 out of the 14 bales and that as to the remaining six bales the contract had, by mutual consent, been rescinded. The plaintiffs had the 14 bales in question with a firm called Muruganathan Chetty and the former gave the defendant a delivery order on that firm; the defendant endorsed the delivery order to one Ameerehand Idanmull to whom he had in his turn sold the goods. The Chetty firm delivered the goods to Idanmull who rejected 6 of the 14 bales as being unmerchantable as the packing was damaged. The defendant's case is that, on Idanmull's rejection of the six bales, he, the defendant, complained to plaintiffs' agent, Satagopa Pillai, and the latter promised to take back the six bales and re-plate them by others. This was in July. On or about 24th September Satagopa Pillai offered the new bales, but the price having dropped by that time, defendant refused them and he and Satagopa Pillai agreed that the latter should take back the bales and that the contract should be cancelled with reference to them. Some question has been raised on the fact that three of the bales remained with defendant after the date of the alleged cancellation, but this is, in my opinion, satisfactorily explained by the evidence of D. W. No. 1 and D. W. No. 2. I have carefully considered the evidence and I have come to the conclusion that the finding of the learned Judge, that the cancellation alleged has been proved, is justified by the evidence. Satagopa Pillai, the plaintiffs' agent, with whom the contract was made and who is said to have entered into the agreement cancelling the contract as to the six bales, was not called at the trial.

On appeal, however, a point of law which does not seem to have been argued at the trial has been taken. It is said that the plaintiffs must succeed as the agreement to cancel is a mere nudum pactum, being without consideration and, therefore, illegal. It is said that section 62 of the Indian Contract Act, which, at first sight, governs this case, does not in fact do so, as it has no application to substitution, rescission or alteration after breach of the original contract. It is undoubtedly the English Law, arising from the evolution of the doctrine of consideration in that system, that a new contract after breach of the original one must be supported by consideration. As Eyre, C. J., said in Lynn v. Bruce (3). "Assord executed is satisfaction: assord executory is only substituting one cause of action in the room of another, which might go on to any extent." So an agreement to abandon a claim is said to be a mere nudum pactum. It will be remembered that in Roakes v. Beer (4), in which the necessity for fresh consideration was affirmed, Lord Blackburn went so far as to write an opinion dissenting from that of the majority of the Lords, but finding himself in the minority he did not deliver it.

This doctrine in fact applies only to executory contracts. I am not altogether satisfied that there has been a breach in this case. The 14 bales were delivered and six were rejected, but there was, as far as I can discover, no time for delivery fixed by the contract, nor can I find any evidence that defendant treated the rejection by his purchaser as a breach of contract on the part of the plaintiffs. Defendant seemed to be perfectly satisfied with the assurance of plaintiffs' agent that fresh bales would be substituted in a few days time. I think there is something to be said for the view that the contract as regards the six bales was not executed, and that before execution or even before the time for performance the parties agreed to confine the operation of the original contract to eight bales only, i.e., they altered the original contract so as to include eight bales only. If this view is correct, there is of course no doubt that section 62 applies and the parties were at perfect liberty to do this. I assume, however, for the purpose of this judgment that this view is wrong and that there was a breach of the original contract to deliver 14 bales and that the agreement to cancel the contract as to the six bales was only arrived at after a breach of the original contract.

It is said that this doctrine of the English Law is embodied in section 62 and that the words "before breach" must be read into the section. Reliance is placed on Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das (1), where it was held that section 62 is a legislative expression of the Common Law and its provisions do not apply to a case where there has been a breach of the original contract before the subsequent agreement is come to. There, the Court found as a fact that the plaintiffs did not intend to accept defendant's mere promise to pay cash and give a bond. He neither paid nor tendered the bond. Had the finding been that plaintiffs did so intend to accept these promises in satisfaction of the original contract, I gather the judgment would have proceeded on different lines. Why cannot we hold in the present case that the mutual arrangement to waive delivery on the one side and to waive payment on the other was a satisfaction of the original contract? As Subramania Ayyar, J., put it in Davis v. Cundasami Mudali (5). "The former case (i. e., section 62) ex hypothesi necessarily implies consideration which is either the mutual renunciation of right or coupled with it the mutual undertaking of fresh obligations or the renunciation of some right on the one side and the undertaking of some obligation on the other, that forms the consequence of an agreement to rescind, substitute or alter, mentioned in section 62." It appears to me, therefore, that there is ground for saying that the case in Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das (1), is different from that before us and that in the latter the mutual renunciation of right can be treated as satisfaction of the original contract. It appears, moreover, to me to be somewhat remarkable to hold that section 62 imports the highly technical rule of English Law. If the section were only intended to apply before breach, why does it not say so? The form of the English plea (on which most of the old cases proceed), as set out in Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das (1), was "that after the alleged contract and before any breach thereof etc." It seems on principle unreasonable to import into the plain words of the section a modification based on such technical grounds. Further, there is authority for saying that section 63 "not only modified but is in direct antagonism to the law in England"—Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das (1); see also Davis v. Cundasami Mudali (5), which holds that an agreement under section 63 does not require consideration to support it and where the English Law is considered. As Subramania Ayyar, J. said (page 472*): "Now the question arises whether the Indian Legislature intended to perpetuate such an unsatisfactory state of things in this country. I think that it did not, that in the Contract Act the doctrine of consideration was not extended to the regulation and restraining of the discharge of contract by agreement, and that the Legislature laid down by section 63 a rule different from that of the English Law." It is highly improbable that of these two sections, section 62 and section 63, the latter should constitute a clear modification of the English Law as to the requirement of consideration, while the former should be held (by implication and without any suggestion to that effect in the wording itself) to import the highly technical doctrine of accord and satisfaction. With great deference to the learned Judges who decided in 1888 Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das (1), above referred to, I cannot think that there was any such intention. Further, we have the Madras case reported as Ramiah Bhagavathar v. Somas Ambalam (2). Of the learned Judges, Seshagiri Ayyar, and Kumaraswami Sastri, J.J., who decided that case, the former was "not, as at present advised, prepared to dissent from Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das (1)" but based his judgment on another ground. The latter, distinctly disapproved of the doctrine in Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das (1). He said: "I do not think that Courts should engraft on the plain meaning of the provisions of enactments, limitations founded on technical rules of English Law and pleading, especially in cases where such limitations are not suited to the conditions prevailing in this country." With these observations I respectfully agree and following that learned Judge, I am prepared, if necessary, to dissent from Manohur Koyal v. Thakur Das (1), for the reasons I have set out above.

I agree with the order as to costs proposed by my Lord.

On all these grounds the judgment of the learned Judge must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Excess Profits Duty Act (X of 1919), ss. 4, 5 (b), 6 (1) (b)—Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), ss. 12 (1), 14 (1)—Assets of firm consisting of money invested in public companies and in Government securities, if can be treated as capital employed in business of firm—"Capital employed in business," meaning of.

The expression "capital employed in the business" in the first proviso to section 6 (1) (b) of the Excess Profits Duty Act, includes capital of a firm invested by them in the course of their business in Government securities or in shares in public companies. Such investments must consequently be included in the capital computation both for the accounting period and "the standard years." [p. 911, col. 2.]

Per Richardson, J.—Neither on principle nor by reason of any specific provision contained in either the Excess Profits Duty Act or the Income Tax Act, does such capital cease to be the capital of a firm employed in the business, because it is so invested or because, in the case of the sharer, the dividends under the Income Tax Act are taxed at the source and are not, when paid to the firm, part of their taxable income. JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Reference under section 51 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, and rule 31 of the Excess Profits Duty Rules.

It appears that Messrs. Martin and Co. were required to pay duty upon excess profits calculated at a certain figure which is named in the Reference. The Adviser on Excess Profits Duty to the Government of India made a representation to the Board of Revenue that certain items in the calculation were wrong and under rule 20 of the Excess Profits Duty Rules, 1920, the Board called upon Messrs. Martin and Co., to show cause why the Excess Profits Duty Assessment should not be enhanced. On the 21st of January this year Messrs. Martin and Co. put in an answer to this requisition, and that answer is attached to the case. Messrs. Martin and Co., requested that if the contentions of the Board of Revenue were persisted in, reference should be made to the High Court on two questions. The questions were as follows: "(1) Whether they are entitled to treat as capital employed in the business such assets of the firm as consist of money invested in public companies and in Government securities and in loans to individuals and business concerns and similarly to treat as income of the business dividends and interest received on such investments and loans? (2) Whether the capital employed in the business should be ascertained in a manner analogous to that provided in section 5 (b) of Act X of 1919, for the ascertainment of profits in the accounting period?"

The first question was treated by the Board of Revenue under three heads, the first head relating to the capital invested by Messrs. Martin and Co. in public companies; the second one relating to money invested in Government securities, and the third one relating to loans to business concerns and individuals.

The decision of the Board was as follows: with regard to the first head they concluded: "The amount credited in the accounts in respect of dividends upon shares in these companies should be deducted from the total profits of Messrs. Martin and Co. and the capital value of the shares should be excluded from any capital computation both for the accounting period and the standard years." As regards the second head the Board concluded as follows: "In view of section 5 (a) of the Excess Profits Duty Act and in the absence of any specific provision of the Act regarding investments the Board is of opinion that the money invested by Messrs.

MARTIN & CO. V. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Martin and Co. in Government securities is part of the capital employed in their business and the income from these investments is part of the taxable income of the business." As to the third head they concluded that money lent by Messrs. Martin and Co. to business concerns and individuals was capital employed in their business and the income from interest on these loans was part of the income of the business.

As regards the finding under the first head Mr. Langford James who appeared for Messrs. Martin and Co. did not contest the conclusion of the Board that the amount credited in the accounts in respect of dividends from shares in the companies should be deducted from the total profits of Messrs. Martin and Co. but he did contest the second part of their conclusion, namely, that the capital value of the shares should be excluded from any capital computation both for the accounting period and the standard years.

Mr. B. L. Mitter, who appeared with the learned Advocate-General for the Board of Revenue, contended that the case should be remitted to the Board both as regards the investments in shares of public companies and as regards the investments in Government securities, inasmuch as, he alleged, it was a question of fact whether the investments in the shares of the companies and the investments in Government securities had been treated by Messrs. Martin and Co. as capital or merely as profits. We, however, pointed out during the course of the argument that this point apparently had not been raised before the Board of Revenue or by the Board of Revenue in the case submitted to this Court, but that, on the other hand, the Board had treated both the investments in the shares of the companies and the investments in Government securities as capital and that consequently we must deal with the reference upon that assumption; and, we declined to remit the case for a further finding to the Board of Revenue in those two respects.

The basis of the Board's decision as to the investments in shares of public companies was that the capital thus invested by Messrs. Martin and Co. was the capital of the companies, and could not, therefore, be said to be the capital employed by Messrs. Martin and Co. in their business, and further, that the income received by them from dividends on shares in the companies was part of the "taxable income" of these companies and was not part of the "taxable income" of Messrs. Martin and Co. within the meaning of section 14 (1) of the Income Tax Act, VII of 1918, or section 5 (2) of the Excess Profits Duty Act, X of 1919.

The material sections of the Excess Profits Duty Act, X of 1919, are sections 5 and 6. Section 5 provides as follows, "5. The profits of a business in the accounting period shall, at the option of the person by whom the Excess Profits Duty in respect of that business is payable, be or be deemed to be,— (a) the taxable income as finally ascertained for the purposes of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918," for the present purpose it is not necessary for me to read the remainder of that section. Section 5, it appears from what I have read, deals with ascertainment of profits in the accounting period. Section 6 deals with the ascertainment of standard profits. It is not necessary for me to read sub-section (1) (a) of section 6, because that does not apply to this case but sub section (1) (b) of section 6 does apply and that provides as follows:—

"The standard profits of a business shall be.....at the option of the person by whom Excess Profits Duty in respect of the business is payable." (Then follow three sub-clauses the third of which is applicable to this case, namely) "if the profits of the business have been assessed for the said purposes in all the five years 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917—the aggregate of one-fourth of the profits assessed in the years 1913 and 1914 and in such two of the years 1915, 1916 and 1917 as may be selected by the said person and one-fourth of the interest, if any, received in the same four years on securities forming part of the assets of the business". So far, therefore, it appears that the question of capital employed in the business does not arise, but to that section there is a proviso and that proviso is as follows, "provided that if the average capital employed in the business in the years adopted for the purpose of determining the standard profits is less or more than the capital so employed at the end of the accounting period there shall be made to or from the standard profits an addition or a deduction, as the case may be, which shall bear to the standard profits the same proportion as such increase or decrease of capital bears to the average capital so employed in the years so adopted."

Then there is explanation, viz., "for the purpose of ascertaining the average capital employed, the capital employed in the business in any year shall be deemed to be the capital so employed at the end of that year." This proviso applies when the standard profits are to be ascertained under section 6 (1) (b), as in this case. Therefore, it becomes necessary to ascertain what was the average capital employed in the business in the years adopted for the purpose of determining the standard profits; and, it also becomes necessary to ascertain what was the capital employed in the business at the end of the accounting period, and it is in reference to this proviso that the question arises whether the investments of Messrs. Martin and Co. in the shares of public companies are to be included or excluded both for the accounting period and for the period which has been described in the case as "the standard years." As to this matter, the learned Counsel appearing for the Board of Revenue admitted that he could not support the contention of the Board of Revenue that because the dividends received on the shares of these companies were not part of the "taxable income" of Messrs. Martin and Co., by reason of section 12 (1) of the Income Tax Act, VII of 1918, it must follow that the investments were not capital employed in the business of Messrs. Martin and Co.; and, therefore, the only question which remains to be considered is whether the investments in shares of public companies are capital employed in the business of the company or are not capital employed in the business of the company, because the investments must be considered as the capital of the companies themselves. I have already stated that in this reference, as this case is stated for our opinion, the investments must be taken as having been treated as part of the capital of the firm of Messrs. Martin and Co., and, that being so, in my judgment the investments in the shares of the public companies were capital employed in their business. The statement of Messrs. Martin and Co. which is to be found at page 7 of the paper-book was as follows: "The business of the firm is and has been for very many years carried on under the terms of a deed of partnership which thus describes the business which the firm may carry on. The business of the firm shall be that of engineers, contractors architects, builders, merchants and agents and such other business as the partners may from time to time decide," "(b) for very many years past the partners of the firm have from time to time decided to apply the money and assets of the partnership in various ventures, e. g., they have invested money in shares in public companies; in response to an appeal by Government they invested money in War Loan. They have granted loans to individuals for whom they were constructing houses and to business concerns. Such investments have been made with the concurrence of all the partners. In many, if not, most cases the investments in public companies have been made with a direct reference to other business carried on by the partnership. Thus, for instance, the partnership acts as managing agents for a large number of companies. It is desirable that as such managing agents they should own shares in such companies and in one instance, at any rate, the articles render it obligatory upon them to hold shares in the company for which they act as managing agents. The partnership has also promoted companies, floated private concerns, in which the partnership was interested, into public companies and as a natural result taken shares. (c) The moneys so invested by the partners in the interest of the partnership have been invariably treated in the books of the firm as assets of the partnership and any profit or loss derived or suffered by the sale of such investments has been invariably treated as profit or loss derived or suffered by the partnership and all dividends or interest have been invariably in the profit and loss account of the partnership and such income employed for the general purposes of the partnership."

These being the facts, in my judgment, it being conceded that these investments have been treated as part of the capital of the firm, such investments were "capital in the business of the firm" and consequently as such must be included in the capital computation both for the accounting period and "the standard years."

As to the Government securities, Mr. B. L. Mitter agreed that there was on this point no difference in principle between these and the investments in public shares, if such investments were to be taken as having been treated by Messrs. Martin and Co. as capital: J.

MARTIN & CO. V. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

consequently, agree with the conclusion arrived at by the Board in this respect.

The second question which I have already read deals with a different matter. The conclusion of the Board on that question was as follows: "In the opinion of the Board no addition can be made to the capital employed on the 3rd September 1918 as there is no provision in the Act for the exercise of an option similar to that allowed in section 5 (b) for the ascertainment of profits." There again I agree with the conclusion at which the Board of Revenue has arrived and for the reasons which they have stated.

The decision of the Board of Revenue with regard to the third head of the first question, which dealt with loans to individuals and business concerns was not contested.

Each party will pay his or their own costs of this reference, on the ground that we have decided one question (the first question) in favour of Messrs. Martin and Co. and the other question (the second question) in favour of the Board of Revenue.

Let a copy of our judgment be sent to the Board of Revenue as soon as possible.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree.

RICHARDSON, J.—The matter before us is how the amount of Excess Profits Duty payable by Messrs. Martin and Co. should be determined.

By section 4 of the Excess Profits Duty Act of 1919 the duty payable is 50 per cent. of the amount by which the "profits in the accounting period" exceed the "standard profits." By section 5 (b) for which Messrs. Martin and Co. opted "the profits in the accounting period" depend on the taxable income "for the total period specified, ascertained according to the provisions of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1918. Section 5 (b), therefore, incorporates by reference Chapter I of the Income Tax Act.

Under section 6 of the Excess Profits Duty Act the "standard profits" with which the "profits in the accounting period" have to be compared, depend or may in whole or in part depend, on the capital of the business or the capital employed in the business. Messrs. Martin and Co. selected one of the modes of settling the standard profits allowed by section 6 (1) (b).

Two questions of method are in dispute. Both relate to the computation of the capital of the firm. The first turns on the meaning of the words "capital employed in the business" in the first proviso to section 6 (1) (b) of the Excess Profits Duty Act, and was argued for the Secretary of State with reference to the provisions of sections 12 (1) and 14 (1) of the Income Tax Act.

In my opinion under the Excess Profits Duty Act "capital employed in the business" includes capital of the firm invested by them in the course of their business in Government securities or in shares in public companies. Neither on principle nor by reason of any specific provision in either of these Acts, does such capital cease to be the capital of the firm employed in the business because it is so invested or because in the case of the shares the dividends under the Income Tax Act are taxed at the source and are not, when paid to Messrs. Martin & Co., part of their taxable income. It will be observed that under section 12 (1) of the Income Tax Act dividends on shares in a company are only excluded when the company is liable to the tax and that under section 13 they are included in the total income for the purpose of determining the rate at which the tax is payable.

I should add that the Board's Reference assumes that the Government securities and shares represent capital invested by Messrs. Martin and Co.

The second question turns on the meaning of the words "capital so employed" (that is capital employed in the business) "at the end of the accounting period." Those words also occur in the proviso to section 6 (1) (b) of the Excess Profits Duty Act. This question was argued for Messrs. Martin and Co. with reference to the provisions of section 5 (b) of the same Act, and I agree that the question is concluded by the definition of "accounting period" in section 2. There is nothing in section 5 (b) which enables us to put a meaning on that definition other than that which the words plainly convey.

The learned Counsel for the parties, each in his turn, suggested—that if I may be permitted to say so, those suggestions were in no way unduly pressed—that resort should be had to analogy for the purpose of supplying what appear to be, or what may possibly be, lacunae in the Act of 1919. Dealing with legislation of this kind, imposing a tax, drawn on scientific lines and laying down positive rules for calculating the amount of the tax, we are clearly unable to take that course.

I concur, therefore, in the answers which my Lord has proposed to the questions put by the Board of Revenue.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, cl. 3, O. XXIII, r. 3—Arbitration—Reference through Court—Reference cancelled by parties—Arbitrator appointed out of Court—Application to file award as adjustment—Suit on award—Fresh reference to arbitration, effect of, on earlier arbitration proceedings.

In a suit for dissolution of partnership, an order was passed under clause 3 of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, referring the matters in dispute to two arbitrators. Later, the parties informed the Court that they had cancelled this reference and had privately appointed T. alone as the sole arbitrator. T. delivered his award on 18th April 1919. On 15th August 1919 plaintiff applied to file the award as an adjustment under O. XXIII, r. 3, of the Code. On the 18th March 1920 the parties, alleging that contentions had been raised against the award by some of the defendants, applied for the appointment of T. as arbitrator through the Court. The Court appointed T. as arbitrator who was to submit the award before the 15th April 1920. T. was unable to submit his award by that date so that the arbitration proceedings fell to the ground. On 17th November 1920 plaintiff sought to continue his application under O. XXIII, r. 3:

Held, that upon a proper construction of the application of 18th March 1920, and the order thereon, the previous arbitration proceedings were considered as at an end, as the parties had agreed to a fresh arbitration of a character different to the previous arbitration, although the arbitrator was the same; that the parties were relegated to their original position, that, therefore, the application in question could no longer be entertained and that the suit must continue. JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for dissolution of partnership. The suit was filed on the 8th February 1918. On the 13th February 1918, an order was passed under the third clause of the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code referring the matters in dispute to two arbitrators, Mr. Thakor Das and Mr. Trikamlal. Later on, the parties informed the Court that they had cancelled the reference to these gentlemen, and had privately appointed Mr. Trikamlal alone as the sole arbitrator. That was consequently an arbitration without the intervention of the Court. Mr. Trikamlal delivered his award on the 18th of April 1919. On the 15th August 1919 the plaintiff presented an application to file the award as an adjustment under O. XXIII, r. 3, of the Civil Procedure Code. But previous to that, on the 25th June 1919, he had filed a suit on the award, Suit No. 572 of 1919.

Then, on the 18th March 1920, the parties made an application to the Court that as certain contentions had been raised against the award by the first and second defendants, for the sake of settling disputes between the parties the Court would be pleased to appoint Mr. Trikamlal as an arbitrator through the Court and, after taking evidence which the parties might have to adduce, he should give his award and the parties should treat that award as final. On the same day the Court appointed Mr. Trikamlal sole arbitrator with the consent of the parties, and he was to submit his award on or before the 15th April 1920. Mr. Trikamlal was unable to submit his award by that date and eventually returned the papers, so that the arbitration proceedings fell to the ground.

on reference, dated 14th October 1918, and the alleged award dated 18th April 1919, could be entertained any longer after the application and order dated, 18th March 1920. On that issue the Judge found that the terms of Exhibit 47, i. e., the application for a fresh Order of Reference, did not make the previous reference nugatory and of no effect, so that the previous reference and the award thereon remained to be enforced. The learned Judge admitted that no exact authority could be found, but he held that the previous contract was not cancelled, nor was a new complete contract that could be enforced substituted. It appears to us obvious that when the parties applied to the Court on the 18th March 1920 to appoint Mr. Trikam Lal sole arbitrator, they agreed that all the previous arbitration proceedings should be annulled.

It was suggested by the respondents that the effect of the application and order of the 18th March 1920 was merely conditional, that if, for any reason, what we may call the third arbitration proceeding should result in nothing, the second arbitration proceeding could be revived, and any of the parties who wished to rely upon the second arbitration proceeding as an adjustment of the suit, should apply to the Court under O. XXIII, r. 3.

We cannot accept that proposition, which is opposed to general principles, and it is impossible to conceive what complications might result if such a suggestion were accepted to. But we must read, in our opinion, the application and order of the 18th March 1920, according to its ordinary meaning, and the only construction we can put on that application and order is that the previous arbitration proceedings were considered as at an end, as the parties had agreed to a fresh arbitration of a different character to the previous arbitration, although the arbitrator was the same. We think, therefore, that the finding of the learned Judge in the Court below that the present application to record the award of the second arbitration proceeding as an adjustment was a good application, was wrong, and that that arbitration having failed, the result was that the parties were relegated to their original position and the suit must continue.

It is not, therefore, necessary to deal with other issues in the case, and to decide whether a decree could be passed in terms of the award of the 18th April 1919. The appeal must be allowed and the suit must continue. The appellant to have his costs throughout from the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 72—Decree-holder purchasing property without permission—Purchase, whether void.

A purchase by a decree-holder who has not obtained permission to bid at an execution sale is neither void nor a nullity but is only to be avoided on the application of the judgment-debtor or some other person interested. The sale would be set aside if the property has not been realised to the best advantage. The conduct of a decree-holder or the fact that he had applied for permission to bid and been refused would not make much difference, for although that would be a fact which the Court might take into consideration in determining whether the sale should be avoided or not, even then it is doubtful whether it would be of any importance, as the question would not be whether the decree-holder had been contumacious, but whether the property had been really realised to the best advantage. [p 916, col. 2; p. 917, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of their Lordships (Atkinson and Das, JJ.) of the Patna High Court, dated 27th February 1919, in First Appeal No. 10 of 1917 reversing the decree, dated 27th December 1916, made by the First Sub-Judge, Muzaffarpur.

RADHA KRISHNA V. BISHESHWAR SAHAY.

JUDGMENT.

LORD PHILLIMORE.—Rai Gudar Sahay, a landowner in the District of Mozaffarpur, borrowed from a joint family of money-lenders to whom the defendants belong, a sum of Rs. 16,000 on the 2nd May 1873, and mortgaged for it his village, Mauza Kataya. The family afterwards separated, and upon the partition of their property various fractions in the mortgage became allotted to the different members. They, however, all joined in a suit brought in 1886 to enforce the mortgage and in the ordinary course obtained a decree on the 31st May 1886, under which if the money was not paid the property was to be brought to sale.

For a time no steps were taken to realise this decree, and the judgment-debtor paid off portions by purchasing, through a benamidar, the shares of some of the decree-holders, for prices which it is noteworthy were considerably less than the nominal values. In January 1889 he bought a share nominally worth Rs. 7,140 for Rs. 3,266; in March 1891, a share nominally worth Rs. 15,209 for Rs. 5,000; and in November 1894 shares nominally worth Rs. 24,619 for Rs. 7,476. This left something under 5 annas of the judgment unsatisfied and these were held in severalty by the respondent Bisheshwar Sahay and two of his brothers. In 1898 Bisheshwar, on behalf of himself and the remaining decree-holders, took proceedings to have the decree executed, and the property was sold by the Court on the 18th April 1899. By that time the judgment-debtor was dead, and his widow was proceeded against in his place. Upon the record of the execution proceedings one Hari Narain was declared purchaser of the village, and he obtained a certificate of sale and possession. The widow applied to set aside the sale on various grounds, but failed. She died in 1904 and was succeeded by her daughter, who died in 1910. Upon the daughter's death the estate of the original judgment-debtor devolved upon the appellants as the next heirs, and they in 1914 instituted the present suit, alleging that the proceedings at the sale had been collusive and fraudulent, that they had recently discovered that Bisheshwar had applied to be allowed to bid and had been refused leave, but in spite of the refusal had purchased the village in the name of Hari Narain, who was his benamidar. The present appellants made certain other points which were disposed of in the course of the proceedings.

The respondent Bisheshwar denied that Hari Narain was his benamidar, and said that Hari Narain was the true purchaser, who had since sold and transferred to him. He also took the point of the Statute of Limitations.

It must be taken to be true that he had applied to the Court for leave to bid and had been refused. Hari Narain purchased the property for Rs. 625 only and sold it, or purported to sell it to Bisheshwar on the 9th December 1902 for Rs. 1,500. The case came before the Subordinate Judge, who by his decree, dated the 27th December 1916, decided in favour of the plaintiffs, the present appellants. He held that the purchase by Hari Narain was made by him as benamidar for Bisheshwar Sahay, and he thought that the Statute of Limitations did not apply, because he held that it was not a suit to set aside a voidable sale, but a suit to recover possession of immoveable property by the heirs in reversion on the death of the last female heir, and was, therefore, covered by Article 141 of the Indian Limitation Act.

Bisheshwar appealed to the High Court, which by its judgment, dated the 27th February 1919, reversed the decision, held that Hari Narain was not a benamidar and further held that the suit was barred by Article 12 of the Indian Limitation Act as being a suit to set aside a sale in execution of a decree by a Civil Court, for which the period of limitation is one year from the date when the sale is confirmed or would otherwise have become final and conclusive. If either of the defenses raised by Bisheshwar be established, the judgment of the High Court at Patna would be right and the suit would fail.

Their Lordships will consider first the question whether it was proved that the transaction was benami. There is, as admitted in the judgment of the High Court, ground for suspecting that the transaction might be of this nature. The Judge of first instance took it as established, though there is some question as to the regularity of the proof, that Hari Narain was in position a servant and a servant to a brother of Bisheshwar, and one not likely to have money, though there was some evidence that he had engaged in commercial transactions. The sum for which the property was sold was exceedingly low. In the view of the Subordinate Judge it was worth Rs. 1,500 or Rs. 1,600 a year gross, from which should be deducted the revenue cesses amounting to about Rs. 400 a year. Not only, therefore, was the original price absurdly low, but Hari Narain, if he were the real purchaser, though making a considerable profit on the re-sale, nevertheless sold to Bisheshwar for much less than he might have expected to get for the property.

But, on the other hand, the widow of the original judgment debtor, who seems to have been advised, made a number of objections to the sale and never raised this one and the matter waited for upwards of 15 years, by which time Hari Narain was dead before these proceedings were taken. It may be said that the widow and her advisers would not know who Hari Narain was, but the fact that the price was as low as it was would have put them upon inquiry, and indeed the witness for the plaintiffs, Khub Lal, if he is to be believed, told the widow's brother about it from the first. The fact that the decree-holders were content to take so small a proportion of the nominal value of their shares in the decree seems to point to there being deficiency in the mortgaged property. Moreover, Bisheshwar's two brothers got in respect of their shares, which together were larger than Bisheshwar's, only their small proportion of the net proceeds of the sale, and as they would certainly have known who Hari Narain was, they must either have been satisfied that the sale was good and that no more could have been realised, or they must have been parties to the fraud, which has not hitherto been suggested. Except the witness Khub Lal, whose evidence, taken as a whole, was unfortunate for the side which called him, and another witness whom the High Court thought unworthy of belief, there was nothing like affirmative evidence of a benami case.

Upon the whole, their Lordships agree with the view of the High Court that it has not been proved that Hari Narain was benami for Bisheshwar. This is sufficient to dispose of the appeal.

With regard to the point on the Statute of Limitations as it was presented before the Courts in India, their Lordships are also of opinion that the decision of the High Court was right. The applicable section of the Code of Civil Procedure regulating sales in execution by the Court is as follows:—

"294. No holder of a decree in execution of which property is sold shall, without the express permission of the Court, bid for or purchase the property.

"When a decree-holder purchases with such permission, the purchase-money and the amount due on the decree may, if he so desires, be set off against one another, and the Court executing the decree shall enter up satisfaction of the decree in whole or in part accordingly.

"When a decree-holder purchases, by himself or through another person, without such permission, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the judgment-debtor or any other person interested in the sale, by order set aside the sale; and the costs of such application and order, and any deficiency of price which may happen on the re-sale and all expenses attending it, shall be paid by the decree-holder."

Upon the construction of this section it is evident that a purchase by a decree-holder who has not obtained permission is not void nor a nullity, but is only to be avoided on the application of the judgment-debtor or some other person interested. It would be injurious to those interested in the sale if a decree-holder who had been forced up in the bidding to give a large sum of money could escape from fulfilling his contract by getting the sale declared a nullity, and it would make all titles under such sales insecure if at later periods they were liable to be treated as nullities. A sale is to be set aside upon application and upon cause shown.

This position is well established and seems to have been accepted by the Subordinate Judge; but in his view the fact that the decree-holder had applied for permission and had been refused made a distinction. Their Lordships, however, cannot see that this makes any difference. He is still a decree-holder who has not obtained permission to bid. He is that and nothing more. If indeed an application were made under the last paragraph of the section, his conduct might be one of the points which the Court would take into consideration in determining whether it would avoid the sale or not. It is doubtful even then whether it would be of any importance. The question would not be whether the decree-holder had been contumacious, but whether the property had been really realised to the best advantage. If it had not, the Court would set the sale aside; if it had, then it mattered not that the decree-holder bought without permission or that he had applied and been refused. If, then, the sale is voidable only and not void, Article 12 in the Act of 1903 applies, and the suit must be brought within one year. Therefore, it was too late. The Counsel for the appellants took a further point. He urged that this case might be treated as one of concealed fraud, to which section 18 of the Act and Article 95 would apply, and that the fraud consisted in concealing from the Court that the decree-holder who had been refused was in fact buying through his benamidar. Their Lordships deem it unnecessary to consider this contention, which was never put forward or discussed in the Courts in India, and the foundation for which is deficient. There is indeed allegation but there is no proof of the time when the fraud, supposing that there were fraud, became known to the plaintiffs (appellants). Moreover, for this purpose the widow would represent the estate, and the Court would have to be satisfied that she did not know. In this connection the evidence of Khub Lal would have to be further considered, as well, perhaps, as that of other witnesses for the plaintiffs.

For these reasons their Lordships deem it unnecessary to express any opinion upon this contention, and upon the whole, they will advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

A decision setting aside an abatement is a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent and is appealable. [p. 919, col. 1.]

An abatement ought not to be set aside as a matter of course or lightly. The plaintiff must satisfy the Court that he had a sufficient cause for not applying in time to set aside the abatement and bring a legal representative of the deceased defendant on the record. JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Pearson, whereby he set aside the abatement of a suit and directed that the record be amended by substituting Sarat Chandra Sarkar for the original defendant, Jadu Nath Sarkar, who has died. The learned Counsel, Mr. Langford James, took a preliminary objection that there was no right of appeal in respect of this judgment, but our attention was drawn to an unreported decision of this Court in Padmabati v. Tulsi Munjuri Debi (Appeal No. 16 of 1918, decided on the 18th June 1918) to which I was a party, the actual decision being given by my learned brother, Mr. Justice Woodroffe, and, when Mr. Langford James had read that decision, he agreed that he could not further contend that there was no right of appeal.

This case is one which I hope is out of the ordinary; and, in order to substantiate that remark, it is necessary for me to refer to some material dates. The suit was filed on the 1st of September 1916—we were informed that it was a suit to recover a sum of about Rs 1,900 which is alleged to have been due to the plaintiffs in respect of goods sold and delivered. The suit was of a simple nature. The written statement was filed after considerable delay on or about the 2nd of June 1917. No steps were taken by the plaintiffs in this suit with the result that on the 22nd of December 1920, more than three years after the written statement had been filed, the case was put into the Special List by the officials of the Court to be disposed of by the learned Judge on the Original Side. It was alleged on behalf of the plaintiffs that it was then discovered that the defendant was dead; and, according to the evidence which was put in on behalf of the plaintiffs, it appears that, in consequence of an enquiry which was made, it was ascertained on the 26th of December 1920 that the defendant had died on the 24th of December 1918, leaving him surviving, Sarat Chandra Sarkar, his only heir and legal representative. It appears from the affidavit which was put in on behalf of the defendant, that an application was made on behalf of H. P. Moitra, on the 4th of January last, for an extract from the Death Register showing the death of the defendant, and that a certificate was obtained on the 5th January, so that it is clear that the plaintiffs knew on the 26th of December 1920, that the defendant had died on the 24th of December 1918 and they got the certificate on the 5th of January 1921. On the 22nd of December 1920 the learned Judge made an order that, in view of the fact that the Attorney for the plaintiffs had stated that the defendant was dead, and as he was taking steps to obtain substitution of the heirs of the defendant, the learned Judge directed that the case should appear in the list on the 12th January 1921 and that the plaintiffs' Attorney should then state what steps he had taken. The plaintiffs' Attorney took no steps; and, when the case again came in the list, on the 12th of January 1921, the learned Judge made an order that an application for revival should be made within a month and that in default the suit should be dismissed with costs. Even then the plaintiffs did not comply with the order, because it was not until the 12th of February that a notice was issued on behalf of the plaintiffs, addressed to the Attorney for the defendant on the record and also to Sarat Chandra Sarkar, such notice stating that an application would be made on the 15th of February, that the abatement should be set aside and that substitution should be effected; so that, even after the 26th of December, it seems to me that the plaintiffs were guilty of unexplained delay and neglect. In order to complete the story, I must give two or three other dates. The defendant died on the 24th of December 1918, and by reason of Article 177 of the Limitation Act, the suit abated on the 24th of June 1919. The plaintiffs, by reason of Article 171, had 60 days from the 24th of June 1919 within which they might make an application to set aside the abatement. No such application was made and the time expired on the 24th of August 1919. Therefore, the time for making an application to set aside the abatement had expired. It was necessary, therefore, for the plaintiffs to show, in these circumstances, that they had sufficient cause, within the meaning of section 5 of the Limitation Act, for not preferring the application within such a period. Assuming for the sake of this judgment, though I am not wholly satisfied about it, that the plaintiffs could get over that difficulty and that the learned Judge was right in entertaining the application, the plaintiffs had then to show under O. XXII, r. 9, that they were prevented by sufficient cause from continuing the suit. That means, in my judgment, that the plaintiffs had to satisfy the Court that there was sufficient cause for not applying in time to bring the legal representatives of the deceased defendant on the record. Ignorance of the death of the defendant up to the 22nd of December 1920, standing by itself, might be a sufficient cause. But, in my judgment, the death of the defendant having occurred in December 1918, it is clear that if the plaintiffs had shown the smallest diligence in prosecuting this suit in the ordinary way they must have discovered earlier than December 1920, two years after the death, the fact that the defendant was dead. In my judgment, the plaintiffs have failed to satisfy me that they were prevented by sufficient cause from continuing the suit within the meaning of O. XXII, r. 9.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the order which the learned Judge made setting aside the abatement and substituing the defendant's son for the defendant ought not to have been made. The facts of this case are so extraordinary that, although I have great respect for the opinion of the learned Judge, I am forced to the conclusion that this appeal must be allowed.

The result is that the learned Judge's order is set aside, including the order that the costs of the application should be costs in the cause, and the plaintiffs' application is dismissed. The plaintiffs must pay the costs of Sarat Chandra Sarkar, of the application before Mr. Justice Pearson and of this appeal.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. When a suit has abated, the setting aside of the abatement deprives the party in whose favour the abatement operates, of a valuable right. This, I understand, is why a decision which sets aside an abatement is a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent and, therefore, appealable. For the same reason an abatement ought not to be set aside as a matter of course or lightly. I am not of course suggesting for a moment that the learned Judge in the present case has made the order appealed from as a matter of course or lightly, but when all the facts are stated, as my Lord has stated them, it seems to me that Pearson, J., in confining himself to the somewhat narrow ground covered by the affidavits of the parties and in leaving out of account the deplorably dilatory conduct of the suit by the plaintiffs, has omitted to consider the question which arises under clause (3) of r. 9 of O. XXII. Under clause (2) of the rule, the plaintiffs had to satisfy the Court that they were prevented by some sufficient cause from continuing the suit within the period allowed by Article 177 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. Under clause (3) the plaintiffs had to satisfy the Court that they had sufficient cause for not making the application to set aside the abatement within the period allowed by Article 171. The application was made long after the expiry of the latter period and, in my opinion, no sufficient cause has been shown for the delay. With great respect, therefore, to the learned Judge I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 20th October 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 31st March 1919.

Lala Hargopal, for Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Dr. G. O. Narang, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts giving rise to this appeal are these. One Duni Chand, an Honorary Magistrate and a man of some wealth, died leaving him surviving a widow, Musmmat Parbati, a son Bishen Das and a grandson Diwan Chand. Diwan Chand was the son of Hari Chand, a deceased son of

DIWAN CHAND V. BISHEN DAS.

Duni Chand, Bishen Das and Diwan Chand apparently desired to separate their shares. Admittedly, on a partition of the estate, Musammatt Parbati was entitled to one-third. Bishen Das and Diwan Chand, however, drew up an agreement referring the matter to certain arbitrators who were asked to partition the property. On the 20th April 1915 the said arbitrators gave their award: Bishen Das and Diwan Chand each received approximately half of the estate left by Duni Chand and the arbitrators directed that a sum of Rs. 50 per mensem was to be paid to Musammatt Parbati as maintenance; Diwan Chand had to pay Rs. 25 a month out of this, and as Bishen Das was in possession of a house which had been left undivided in which Dewan Chand had a half share, it was arranged that Bishen Das should pay Rs. 10 per mensem as rent, this sum being paid to Musammatt Parbati towards Diwan Chand's contribution for her maintenance. On the 23rd May 1915 Diwan Chand sent a money-order for Rs. 180 to Musammatt Parbati. This amount was for maintenance for one year at the rate of Rs. 15 per mensem. The money-order was refused. Again, on the 29th June 1916, and later on, the 17th June 1917, money-orders for Rs. 90 and Rs. 75 were sent by Diwan Chand but on each occasion were refused by Musammatt Parbati. It should be noted that Musammatt Parbati was living with her son Bishen Das and that she had not been a party to the reference to the arbitrators. Diwan Chand appears to have credited the amounts remitted by him, and refused by Musammatt Parbati, to Parbati's account in his account-books. Musammatt Parbati died and after her death Dewan Chand sued Bishen Das for the rent of the joint house, viz., Rs. 10 per mensem which Bishen Das should have paid to Musammatt Parbati but apparently did not. Diwan Chand obtained a decree. After this Bishen Das instituted the present suit for Rs. 800, being the amount payable to Musammatt Parbati by Diwan Chand for a period of two years and eight months at the rate of Rs. 25 per mensem. He alleged that this sum represented the arrears of maintenance due to Musammatt Parbati and that as such maintenance had formed her utradhan he, as her son, had succeeded to it. Diwan Chand pleaded that his grandmother had, out of love and affection for him, remitted the money due by him for her maintenance and that, therefore, no decree should be passed. The Trial Court dismissed the suit, holding that Musammatt Parbati had waived her right to maintenance, and Bishen Das preferred an appeal to the District Judge at Amritsar, who came to the conclusion that there had been no waiver on the part of Musammatt Parbati of her right to receive maintenance from Diwan Chand and that her refusal to accept the money-order, referred to above, was due to the fact that she was dissatisfied with the award and wanted a larger share in the property. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit. Against this decree Diwan Chand has now preferred this second appeal to this Court and on his behalf I have heard Lala Har Gopal while Dr. Gokal Chand Narang has appeared on behalf of Bishen Das.

Lala Har Gopal's contention was that inasmuch as Musammatt Parbati had refused to receive the moneys sent to her, her refusal amounted to an assertion on her part that she did not accept the arrangement made by the arbitrators and was claiming her one-third share. He pointed out that the fact that Bishen Das had not paid her the Rs. 10 per mensem that he had undertaken to pay on behalf of Diwan Chand was a further indication of Musammatt Parbati's intention to claim share in the estate and not to accept maintenance in lieu thereof. He also drew attention to the fact that a telegram purporting to have been sent by Musammatt Parbati shortly after the last money-order had been refused showed that she was contemplating a suit for her one-third share. Reference was made to section 37 of the Indian Contract Act and Mangal Sen v. Muhammad Hussain (1) and it was argued that inasmuch as Musammatt Parbati could not have sued for maintenance herself, her son could not now sue for arrears. In Mangal Sen v. Muhammad Hussain (1) it was held that where on a lease of certain land the lessees undertook, as between themselves and their lessor, to be responsible for the payment to the Zemindars of certain sums which the lessor was primarily bound to pay, the Zemindars could not enforce this covenant against the lessees. It was thus contended that the learned District Judge, having found that Musammât Parbati had refused to accept the maintenance provided for her by the award because she desired to obtain her one-third share in the entire property, he should have held that the suit by the plaintiff was not competent. Dr. Gokal Chand Narang urged that this was entirely a new point which could not be raised as it had not been urged in the Courts below. To this Lala Har Gopal replied that the point was not a new one but arose out of the facts that had been stated in the pleadings, the facts being that, under the award to which Musammât Parbati was not a party she had been allowed a certain sum as maintenance which sum she had refused to accept. He contended that the mere fact that his client alleged that the refusal to accept this maintenance was due to love and affection did not affect the issue. In any event, he argued that it is a pure question of law arising out of the findings of the Courts below and one which was patent on the record. Ma Lay v. Tun Shue (2) was cited as authority. In that case it was held that a new point could be raised for the first time in second appeal provided it was purely a question of law which arose out of the findings of the Courts below and was not affected by any facts outside the findings. Dr. Gokal Chand Narang conceded this but urged that the new point of law should have been mentioned in the grounds of appeal in order that the other side might have notice of it, and pointed out that there was no mention of this new point in the grounds of appeal to this Court, at any rate, in that form. It seems to me, however, that ground No. 2 of the grounds of appeal to this Court covers this point and there it is urged that Musammât Parbati having refused to receive the maintenance the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain a suit for the recovery of arrears of such maintenance. It seems to me that Lala Har Gopal's contention is correct and that there is force in his argument. Musammât Parbati was not bound by the reference to the arbitrators; she was not, therefore, bound to accept maintenance, being entitled to a definite share in her husband's estate. It also appears clear, having regard to the authority in Mangal Sen v. Muhammad Hussain (1), that she could not have maintained a suit against Diwan Chand under that award for her maintenance and that, therefore, Bishen Das who claims as her heir cannot maintain this suit for arrears. Dr. Gokal Chand then urged that, in any event, his client could claim contribution from Diwan Chand inasmuch as Musammât Parbati had been living with him and had been maintained by him during the period in question. The suit, however, is not for contribution, and inasmuch as Musammât Parbati was not entitled to a share in the estate and had not agreed to maintenance in lieu thereof, I am unable to hold that the nature of the suit can now be changed so as to make the suit for arrears of maintenance one for contribution.

(1) 37 Ind. Cas. 737; 37 A. 115; 13 A. L. J. 73.

EAST INDIAN RY. CO. v. KIRKWOOD.

In these circumstances, I must accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Trial Court dismissing the suit. In the circumstances, however, I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Burden of proof, question of—Question not material after evidence of both parties is out—Witnesses, credibility of—Shifty witnesses—Demeanour in witness-box—Trial Judge's impressions.

EAST INDIAN RY. CO. v. KIRKWOOD.

However important the question of the burden of proof may be in the early stages of a case, after all the evidence is out on both sides, it must be looked at as a whole, and the truth of the occurrence must be inferred from it. [p. 922, col. 2.]

The statement of a shifty witness that he was not at a given place, is not of itself proof that he was. [p. 923, col. 1.]

When a Trial Judge disbelieves witnesses on grounds connected with their demeanour in the witness-box and the impression they produced upon him, effect should, in the absence of anything to the contrary, be given to the view formed of the witnesses by the only Judge who saw and heard them. [p. 923, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court, (Sir Lancelot Sanderson, C. J., Woodroffe and Mookerjee, JJ.), dated 29th August 1917 reversing a decree of the District Judge of Patna, dated 12th May 1913.

Sir John Simon, K. O., and Sir William Garth, for the Appellants.

Mr. F. Baden Fuller, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SUMNER.—No question of law is involved in this case nor are the facts in themselves of an out of the way kind, but in the Courts below they have led to great differences of opinion. It has been common ground that the burden of proof was on the appellants, except as to the question of damages, though before the trial the District Judge made an order that the plaintiff should give his evidence first on all issues. On appeal much stress was laid on this error. The District Judge is said to have been led by it into misconceptions as to the truthfulness of the plaintiff's witnesses, to have thought that the plaintiff must fail if his witnesses were not believed, to have been provoked by the conduct of the plaintiff's case into believing the wrong side, and, having gone to see the site of the accident for himself, to have mentioned what he saw in his judgment, which was not evidence. In the view of some members of the High Court, these matters seem to have gone some way to the reversal of his judgment, even though it turned largely on his view of the demeanour of witness called before him on a pure question of fact.

Their Lordships are of opinion that these strictures do the learned Trial Judge less than justice. Perusal of his elaborate and detailed judgment shows that, when he came to weigh the evidence, his mind was fully alive to the true aspect of the burden of proof, and that his reasons for giving credence to some witnesses and not to others are judicial and clear, and give no ground for saying that his conclusions of fact are "vitiated" (per Woodroffe, J.) by any error of law as to the burden of proof. They find no misdirection of himself in his judgment; they acquit him of any suspicion of bias, and if, in the course of an arduous trial which lasted sixteen days, he made any observations of too severe a character (which they by no means are inclined to affirm), they were not made without provocation and had no effect upon his judgment. Their Lordships cannot find that the order criticised worked any injustice to the plaintiff in substance, and in general litigants consider that they gain an advantage by having the first word and the last.

On the other hand, their Lordships think that some portions of the judgments of the members of the High Court, who thought that the judgment of the Trial Judge ought to be reversed, were unduly influenced by consideration of the question of the burden of proof. However important this question may be in the early stages of a case, after all the evidence is out on both sides, it must be looked at as a whole, and the truth of the occurrence must be inferred from it. The judgments in question have not sufficiently observed this.

Two questions have been discussed, one "How came the rail to be displaced?" the other, "Why was not the displacement seen in time?" Upon the first, the great controversy was whether any servants of the Railway Company were on the spot at all when the rail was taken out. The time when this was done, could be determined within narrow limits, for trains had passed over the spot in safety down to about 4 A. M., and the time of the accident was fixed at 5-38 A. M., or thereabouts. The removal of the rail in itself was, to say the least of it, equally consistent with sabotage by strangers as with negligent conduct of the Company's own men. The defendants gave a considerable quantity of credible evidence to show that in ordinary course their gangs of linesmen would not assemble for the day's work till after this time, and so far from this being contradicted, the plaintiff's case assumed this to be so, for an ingenious but hardly convincing attempt was made to show that on this particular day all the men must have been independently misled as to the time by the passage of a special train, although the state of the light would have told them plainly that they were getting up and going to work needlessly early. The coolies themselves were called and denied that they were on the line at the material time at all. Some of their tools were found close to the scene of the accident, and they denied the identity and ownership of these tools. This falsehood is capable of being explained without necessarily assuming that nothing that they said was true, but let it be that their evidence was wholly untrustworthy. The statement of shifty witnesses that they were not at a given place, is not of itself proof that they were. The plaintiff accordingly called witnesses, who swore to having seen these men on the line at the critical time and place, but the learned Trial Judge disbelieved them on grounds connected with their demeanour in the witness-box and the impression they produced on him, and nothing in the record shows that effect should not be given to the view formed of these witnesses by the only Judge who saw and heard them. There remains the question of the tools. In the High Court D. Chatterjee, J., speaks of this incident as furnishing "the key to the whole situation." Its importance greatly depends on its significance, and unless its nature is such as to point with reasonable probability to the presence of the railway coolies at the place where the rail was removed at or just before the time when this was done, the incident is not of great significance. One hypothesis, namely, that the tools were accidentally left behind when the men left work the evening before, may be set aside for they ought not to have been left behind, and the man responsible for them said that he locked them up in their box and kept the key. Next day the box with its lock was intact, and most of the tools were in it, but the three tools in question were found on the line. There does not appear to have been anything singular about this box or its lock. That it might have been unlocked with another key if it ever was really looked at all is not in itself an extravagant hypothesis, and the evidence does not exclude it. Even if the train wreckers obtained the key by the connivance of one of the Railway Company's coolies, that does not show that the removal of the rail which caused the accident was the work of persons for whose act in so doing the Railway Company was responsible. The incident of the tools would undoubtedly be very material as corroboration of trustworthy evidence that the Railway Company's coolies took out the rail, but if the evidence of this essential fact fails because the witnesses are unworthy of credit, there is nothing for this corroboration to operate upon.

The plaintiff's theory was that the defendants' gang of coolies, having assembled at an exceptionally and needlessly early hour, proceeded to their work at the place of the accident, turning a deaf ear to a tamasha, which was proceeding at a neighbouring village, and then began to remove the rail; that then they thought better of it and, without waiting to turn and re-place the rail, which was what they were there to do, returned to the tamasha, and took their chances that no unexpected and unscheduled train would appear on the scene. It is true there was such a tamasha, for pupa with a nautch in honour of the sun was being performed at the time in question, but the evidence that the coolies came there after first going along the line and removing the rail did not satisfy the Trial Judge, and his conclusion in this respect does not seem to be open to serious criticism. The theory laboured under obvious difficulties but they need not be dwelt upon, for the necessary foundation of fact was never laid on which such a theory might have been successfully reared. Upon this part of the case their Lordships are in agreement with the Judges who were in a minority in the High Court, and, although it was for the Railway Company under the circumstances of such an accident on their line to acquit themselves of responsibility, think that on a review of the whole of the evidence they succeeded in doing so. They established that at the material time their coolies had no occasion to be at this spot at all; and in any case ought not to have removed a rail, and the evidence with which the plaintiff met this prima facie answer, that they actually were there nevertheless, was not believed by the Trial Judge, who was best qualified to appraise it.

The second point, that there was a bad look-out on the engine, was presented at the trial in a somewhat peculiar way. There was a good deal of evidence about it, and it cannot be said that enough foundation was not laid to enable the point to be developed on appeal, but the fact remains that at the trial the case was not presented as a case of bad look-out failing to prevent the accident, but the driver's conduct was treated as evidence going to the precise state of the light, and, therefore, to the precise time of the occurrence, corroborating the plaintiff's case that the defendants' coolies removed the rail. One may be surprised that a separate case of bad look-out was not fought, but it was not. Perhaps the plaintiff's advisers, being fully informed of the local circumstances, decided not to raise the contention that the absence of the rail could have been seen far enough off to enable the train to be stopped in safety. Otherwise they ought in fairness to have put to the engine driver and fire man the plain question, whether they were not negligent in failing to see that the rail was gone in time to stop the train. Suggestions were made that the engine was out of order, in some way that would prove negligence causing the accident, and that the speed was excessive, but clearly both broke down. Their Lordships are unable to agree with those members of the High Court, who considered that the condition of the engine and the failure to pull up in time, established liability.

The case is no doubt one of complexity in its details, and presents in very full measure the evidentiary difficulties which attend all accident cases and particularly Indian accident cases, but, in spite of the sharply divergent opinions expressed in the High Court which their Lordships have been much assisted in appreciating by the fullness with which they have been stated and maintained, they are of opinion that the judgment of the Trial Judge was right and ought to be restored. Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed with costs here and below, and that the judgment in favour of the plaintiff should be set aside and that judgment should be entered for the defendants.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 29—Sale by guardian of minor's property—Permission of Court—Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 3 (5) (a), application of.

In the case of a sale by the guardian of a minor's property where the terms of the sale are settled between the parties privately but in order to complete it permission of the Court is obtained under section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act, the sale is completed by the guardian privately and cannot be said to have been effected in pursuance of an order of a Civil Court. Clause 5 (a) of section 3 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act prohibiting a claim for pre-emption does not, therefore, apply to a case like this. [p. 925, cols. 1 & 2]

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a pre-emption suit. The property sold

belonged to Wasu Ram, minor, defendant in the case. His guardian proposed to sell it to the defendant No. 1, Har Kishen Singh. The property was under mortgage. What was, therefore, proposed to be sold was the equity of redemption in the property. Having settled the terms of the proposed sale, the guardian made an application under section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act for permission to execute a sale-deed. The permission was granted and the sale-deed in question, dated the 26th of November 1916, was executed and registered. The plaintiff thereupon instituted a suit for pre-emption. One of the pleas raised in defense was that under the Punjab Pre-emption Act I of 1913, a suit for pre-emption was not maintainable. Section 3, clause 5 (a) was relied upon in support of this contention and it was argued that inasmuch as the sale was effected in pursuance of an order of a Civil Court, the claim of pre-emption was prohibited under the said clause. The Court of first instance held that the sale was effected privately on a permission being obtained from the Court and the suit was, therefore, not barred. On appeal by the defendant vendee to the lower Appellate Court, the decree of the first Court was upheld. Defendant has now come up in second appeal to this Court, and the only question which requires decision in this case is whether the suit is prohibited under section 3, clause 5 (a) of the Pre-emption Act. It cannot be said that it was a sale in execution of a decree for money but it is contended that it is a sale in execution of an order of a Civil Court. In my opinion there is no force in this contention. According to the plain wording of clause 5 (a), the present sale cannot be said to have been effected in obedience of any order of the Court. The terms of the sale were settled between the parties privately, but as to complete a sale on behalf of a minor permission had to be obtained under section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act. It was, therefore, obtained by the guardian and the sale was completed by the guardian privately in favour of the vendee. On behalf of the appellant the case of Piara Lal v. Ganeshi Lal (1) was relied upon. That was a case in which a right of pre-emption was claimed on a sale having been effected in pursuance of an order by Court under section 356 of the old Code of Civil Procedure and it was held in that case that the sale was in execution of an order of a Civil Court within the terms of section 3, clause 5 (a) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, and consequently not open to a claim for pre-emption. That was clearly a case covered by the bar provided under clause 5 (a). Under the old Code of Civil Procedure an insolvent judgment debtor could apply for a declaration of his insolvency. By section 351 of the Code it was provided that the Court being satisfied on the points mentioned in that section would declare the judgment-debtor an insolvent. By section 352 it was provided that "the creditors mentioned in the application, and the other persons (if any) alleging themselves to be creditors of the insolvent, shall then produce evidence of the amount and particulars of their respective pecuniary claims against him; and the Court shall by order determine the persons who have proved themselves to be the insolvent's creditors and their respective debts; and shall frame a schedule of such persons and debts; and the declaration under section 351 shall be deemed to be a decree in favour of each of the said creditors for their said respective debts." By section 356 it was provided that "the Receiver shall proceed under the direction of the Court to convert the property into money, etc., etc." The sale under section 356, therefore, was a sale in execution of a decree and was effected in obedience to the direction of the Court. Such a sale beyond any doubt would come under section 3, clause 5 (a). The case relied upon, therefore, cannot be any authority in this case.

On behalf of the respondent the case of Ahmad Jan v. Kishen Chand (2) has been relied upon. In that case a sale was effected by the judgment-debtor in virtue of a certificate granted to him by the Executing Court under Order XXI, rule 83, of the present Civil Procedure Code, and it was held that such a sale was a private sale in spite of the fact that it could not become absolute until confirmed by the Court. In the present case even a sanction of the Court was not made necessary by the order granting permission to the guardian to execute the sale deed. In my opinion the principle laid down in the case relied upon by the respondent fully applies to the present case. The sale in this case, as I have said above, was private sale and a claim for pre-emption is not prohibited by section 3, clause 5 (a).

The decisions of the Courts below are right and the appeal must fail. I accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884), s. 101, proviso—"Machinery," meaning of—Water Reservoir and its supporting structure, whether "machinery."

The word "machinery" in the proviso to section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act when used in ordinary language, prima facie, means some mechanical contrivances which by themselves or in combination with one or more other mechanical contrivances by the combined movement and interdependent operation of their respective parts generate power or evoke, modify, apply or direct natural forces with the object in each case of effecting so definite and specific a result. [p. 931, col. 1.]

But the determination in a given case of what is or is not "machinery" must to a large extent depend upon the special facts of the case. [p. 931, col. 1.]

A balancing tank into which water is pumped for distribution in the water mains of a Municipality together with the supporting structure of such tank is not 'machinery.' [p. 931, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an appeal against the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 18th March 1919.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted in the Subordinate Court at Alipore by the present appellants against the present respondent. The question raised therein was whether the Cossipore and Chitpore Municipality had acted ultra vires in assessing the Corporation of Calcutta on an annual value of Rs. 25,000 in respect of a certain holding described in the plaint.

The Subordinate Judge answered this question in the affirmative and gave a decree for the plaintiffs, the Corporation of Calcutta. But his judgment was reversed by the final decree of the High Court above-mentioned whereby the suit was dismissed with costs.

The present appeal has been preferred by the plaintiffs, the Corporation of Calcutta, from this decree.

The appellants supply Calcutta with water and for this purpose own two holdings of land, one situate at 71, Barrackpore Road, Tallah, on which there is now and has, for some time past, been a Reservoir and a Pumping Station. This piece of land has been assessed as a separate holding for the purposes of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884 (Bengal Act III of 1884), and the other, an adjoining holding, No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane, situate about 380 to 400 feet distant from the Pumping Station and measuring about 16 bighas, 18 cottaks and 5 chittaks of land. It is with regard to the assessment of this latter piece of land (hereinafter referred to as No. 2 holding) that this litigation has arisen. Both pieces of land are within the Municipal boundary of the defendant's Municipality (the respondent).

The principal water-works of the appellants are situate at a place named Pulta, about

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA v. CHAIRMAN OF THE COSSIPORE AND CHITPORE MUNICIPALITY.

15 miles from Calcutta, and its principal pumping and distributing station is at Tallah; the pump and engine-house are situate on the piece of land, called in this case holding or lot No. 1, at 71, Barrackpore Road. On this latter plot a very large underground Reservoir has been constructed, from which the water is pumped into the mains at the rate of about 2,000,000 gallons per hour. These pumps work continuously, night and day.

Lot or holding No. 2 is described in the appellants' plaint as measuring about 16 bighas, 18 cottaks and 5 chittaks, and having upon it an old stone masonry building measuring 30 by 20 feet, used as an out-office, and an overhead steel tank, resting on and supported by steel columns and girders. This tank is styled a balancing tank, and is capable of holding when full about 9,000,000 gallons. It is by pipes connected with the pumping-house.

Before its erection the appellants endeavoured to send through their mains to Calcutta a constant supply of water, as far as possible at an equal pressure. In addition to the pumps and underground Reservoirs at their main pumping station, they had a number of subsidiary pumps and Reservoirs at different places in or near the town. These subsidiary pumps only worked during the day time. This system of distribution was adopted in order to cope, if possible, with the difficulty presented by the extreme want of uniformity in the rate at which water was used and consumed in Calcutta. During the hours of the morning, from 6 o'clock to 10 o'clock, the consumption in Calcutta amounted to nearly 4 million gallons per hour, about twice as much as the principal pumps were capable of pumping into the mains; while during the afternoon and the evening so much less water was consumed in the town that the principal pumps, working as they did continuously, were able to supply what was sufficient. After the erection of the balancing tank the subsidiary pumps and Reservoirs were no longer used, and the following method was adopted in substitution for them to furnish Calcutta with a constant and at all times an adequate supply of water. When the consumption in Calcutta exceeded what the pumps could pump into the mains, the balancing tank was tapped by opening with the hand a cock or valve on one of the pipes connecting the tank with the water mains. Through this pipe the water flowed into the mains. Not only did it mingle with and increase the volume of the water already in the mains, but, by reason of the elevation of the tank the force of gravity acting on the water the moment it passed from the tank into the pipes, caused it to rush as it were through the pipe and increase the velocity at which the whole volume of water in the mains flowed toward the town. When the demand in the town had decreased to less than the pumps could supply, a cock on another pipe connected with the tank was by hand opened and the unneeded surplus water was pumped back into the tank, replenishing it so as to raise the level of the water in it to what it was before the discharge of the morning took place. Before the erection of this tank the holding No. 2 of the appellants was, by the Commissioners of the Municipality, in exercise of their powers under the aforesaid Act of 1884, assessed at the annual value of Rs. 1,053.

After the erection of the tank with its supporting structure, which cost the appellants about 20 lakhs of rupees, they assessed this holding at the annual value of Rs. 1,27,030 on the basis of the cost of construction, and demanded rates to the amount of Rs. 1,462-5 3. On an objection being made by the appellants this assessment was, in the month of August 1914, revised and reduced to Rs. 30,000, that being the yearly rent at which, according to the respondent assessors, it might reasonably be expected to be let as it stood to a hypothetical tenant. On a further revision in March 1916, the assessment was on the same basis reduced to Rs. 25,000. It was not really disputed that the rise in the assessment from Rs. 1,053 to Rs. 30,000 was due to the fact that the value of the tank and its supporting structure was not excluded from consideration. The appellants contend that the tank and its supporting structure are, within the meaning of the third proviso of section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act of 1884, "machinery," and, being so, that the respondent was bound by the provisions of that section to exclude them from consideration in making the assessment of lot No. 2, and that in taking them into consideration and thereby raising the assessment they acted ultra vires. Section 101 runs as follows:—

"101. The gross annual rent at which any holding may be reasonably expected to let shall be deemed to be the annual value thereof, and such value shall accordingly be determined by the Commissioners, and entered in the valuation list:

"Provided that, (except in the Darjeeling Municipality) if there be on a holding any building or buildings the actual cost of erection of which can be ascertained or estimated, the annual value of such holding shall in no case be deemed to exceed an amount which would be equal to seven-and-a-half per centum on such cost, in addition to a reasonable ground-rent for the land comprised in the holding:

"Provided also that, where the actual cost so ascertained shall exceed one lakh of rupees, the percentage on the annual value to be levied in respect of so much of the cost as is in excess of one lakh of rupees shall not exceed one-fourth of the percentage determined by the Commissioners under section 102:

"Provided further that in estimating the annual value of a holding under this section, the value of any machinery that may be on such holding shall not be taken into consideration".

It thus results that the sole question for decision on this appeal is whether or not this balancing tank with its supporting structure is "machinery" within the meaning of the last proviso of this section. No definition of the term "machinery" is to be found in the Act. It is not an easy task to define its meaning. Perhaps, the consideration of what are the precise functions which the tank and its supports respectively discharge may afford some assistance. The supporting structure merely serves to give the tank elevation so that the water which is allowed to escape from it may have a fall. The same function would be discharged by any hillside into an excavation upon which a Reservoir was constructed at an adequate height above the house or town which the Reservoir has to supply with water.

Then, as to the tank itself, what functions does it discharge? It is a receptacle for water. It holds the water that is poured into it as long as that is desired. It is stationary. It does not move, nor do any of its parts move, the one upon the other. While water is in it the force of gravity acts upon the water; but the strength and rigidity of its sides counteract that force and prevent the escape or movement of the water. When this water is allowed to escape from it through a hole or holes in its side, into pipes, the same force of gravity acts upon the water and pushes or draws it down the pipes, but this force of gravity acting on the unimprisoned water is neither generated, modified, directed nor applied by the tank. The latter does not move anything automatically. If it be a machine and its parts be machinery, then it is difficult to see why every Reservoir which holds the water that is poured into it and lets that water escape from it through an opening on its side or bottom when that opening is not blocked up, is not equally a machine.

With a view of showing that the tank was a machine or machinery, it was urged on behalf of the appellants that the flow into the pipes of the water allowed to escape from it regulated the course of the water in the pipes and kept up a uniform pressure. But the nature and character of the functions which a Reservoir performs cannot depend upon the work done by the water drawn off from it, or the use to which that water is put. These functions remain the same, whether the escaped water be allowed to flow overland and irrigate it, or be used to water roads, or to drive a dynamo for the purpose of lighting a house or houses with electric light.

Section 6 of the aforesaid Act, no doubt, provides that holding means land held under one title, or agreement and surrounded by one set of boundaries, and farther provides that where two or more adjoining holdings form part or parcel of the site or premises of a dwelling-house, manufactory, warehouse or place of trade or business, such holdings shall be deemed to be one holding for the purposes of the Act, other than those mentioned in clause (a) of its 85th section (i.e. the taxing of persons) and further provides that holdings separated by a road or other means of communication are to be deemed to be adjoining within the meaning of that section.

CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA V. CHAIRMAN OF THE COSSIPORE AND CHITPORE MUNICIPALITY.

Mr. Macmorran, as their Lordships understood him, having regard apparently to these provisions, contended on behalf of the appellants that in order to determine what was the true meaning of the word "machinery," as used in section 101 of this Act, the works and erections on the two lots numbered 1 and 2 respectively, should be taken as a whole, and viewed as so many interdependent parts of one mechanical unit, but if that contention were sound, the underground reservoir, the roof and walls of the engine-house, if not indeed the old stone building used as an office, would all be covered by the word "machinery," quite as completely as would the tank and its supporting structure. The word "machinery" is often used in an entirely metaphorical sense, as in the phrase "the machinery of Government," but, in their Lordships' opinion, neither this engine-house nor this office could, according to the ordinary use of language, possibly be held to be "machinery" within the meaning of this Statute, while, on the other hand, if the tank and its supports be "machinery," it is difficult to see why the underground reservoir is not also "machinery." There is no essential difference between the two, except their situation, the one is buried underground, the other is raised high into the air. Skill, care and money are expended equally on the construction of both. Water is pumped or let flow into the underground reservoir (it does not appear which) from some external source, is stored there and pumped out of it into the mains. Into the tank water is pumped, stored there and allowed when occasion requires to flow out of it through an aperture in its side or bottom into the same mains. Their respective functions so closely resemble each other as to be in essence identical, yet it was not contended, nor even suggested, that the underground reservoir was "machinery." The functions discharged by the tank closely resemble those discharged by the cisterns built on the roofs of those country houses which are situated far away from any system of water-works. The rain water which falls upon the roof of the house is conducted by rain shoots or pipes into the cisterns, is stored there till needed, and is through an aperture or apertures in its sides or bottom drawn by the force of gravity through pipes into the interior of the dwelling-house to satisfy domestic needs of different kinds. If the cistern rested on a tower built purposely to support it, the case would not be altered. Yet, in their Lordships' view, no intelligent person would, in the ordinary use of language, describe this cistern, whether supported on the roof of the dwelling house or on such a tower, together with the rain shoots and rain pipes, as "machinery," and still less would they describe the roof of the house, acting in this case the part of a catchment basin, as "machinery," nor even the water pipes in the interior of the house, nor all the four together. The money of the householder, the skill of the plumber, the carpenter, the mason, and possibly the slater, all have to be expended to fix in situ this system of water supply, just as the similar expense must have been incurred and skill exercised to erect the tank and its supports, but that consideration does not by itself make the one structure or the other "machinery." Nor in the case of the cistern would the fact that the water was drawn into it by the action of a hydraulic ram erected 100 yards from the dwelling-house on the bank of a swiftly flowing river alter the case.

Illustrations such as these may possibly be better guides to the true meaning of the word "machinery," when used in ordinary speech, than scientific definitions. For there is nothing in the language of this Statute of 1884 or in the objects it was designed to effect, to suggest that its words are used in any special sense, differing from their ordinary sense. A completed machine or a number of completed machines may, of course, according to the ordinary use of language, be properly described as "machinery," so may those parts or members of a machine which when assembled, as it is styled, form a complete machine: so also may some of such of those parts, which when assembled with the other necessary parts, would form a complete machine, be styled "machinery"; but none of these conditions exists in the present case.

Much reliance was placed by the appellants' Counsel in argument on a passage on the judgment of Lord Davy in the case of CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA v. CHAIRMAN OF THE COSS.PORE AND CHITPORE MUNICIPALITY.

Chamberlayne v. Collins (1) but nowhere else. The question he was dealing with was whether within the meaning of a covenant in the lease with which he was dealing a switchback Railway with its equipment was "operative machinery."

The first part of the passage runs thus:—

"There is always great danger in giving definitions, but I think I may say that 'machinery' implies the application of mechanical means to the attainment of some particular end by the help of natural forces, and the addition of the word 'operative' means 'with the potentiality of operating or doing work.' It is clear to my mind that a switchback Railway comes within that definition."

He then gives his reason for so thinking in the following words:—

"Because it is a thing skilfully built with curves of a particular shape which by their peculiar form supply the motive power which actuates the carriages which run up and down the Railway."

With all respect for Lord Davey, the words "supply motor power" do not appear to their Lordships to be very happily chosen. When a solid body is placed upon an inclined plane, two natural forces operate upon it—the force of friction and the force of gravity. If it moves down along this plane it is the resultant of those two forces which pull or push it down. The force which the inclined plane contributes is the force of friction. The force of gravity acts with equal strength, whether the slope of the plane be gentle or steep. The force of friction is in this instance a retarding, not an accelerating, force. If the incline of the plane be very gentle and its surface rough, the force of friction will so effectually counteract the operation of the force of gravity that the solid body will remain at rest. If, on the other hand, the incline of the plane be steep and its surface smooth, the force of gravity will so overcome the force of friction that the resultant of the two will pull or push the body down the incline. Of course, if the solid body be mounted on wheels running on rails the force of friction will be greatly diminished.

The curves of the switchback Railway may by their shape favour the operation of the force of gravity, but they cannot increase or diminish that force. It is always constant. The only force the curves contribute to the action of the car is the retarding force of friction, which tends to prevent their movement. It is an error to say that the shape of the curves "supplies motive power." It may give and does give to the ever present force of gravity the opportunity of exerting itself more effectually. That is all.

If a man standing on the roof of a house and holding in his hand a stone, drops that stone into the street below, he does not in any way generate or supply the force which brings the stone to the ground with a velocity which increases as the square of the height of the man's hand above the street, and as momentum is weight multiplied by velocity, the stone strikes the ground with great force. But that force is, in no proper sense of the term, generated or supplied by the man. While he held the stone in his hand he overcame the action of the force of gravity by the upward pressure of his hand. When he drops the stone he simply withdraws that upward pressure and allows the force of gravity to take full effect.

So, in the present case, it would, in the view of their Lordships, be an entire mistake to treat the force which hurries through mains the water that escapes from this tank, as a force generated or supplied or directed by the tank itself. The tank no more actuates the rush of the escaping or escaped water than does, in the above example, the hand of the man on the roof of the house actuate the fall of the stone he held in it. The respective effects of the forces of gravity and friction on solid bodies resting on a sloping hillside were much discussed in the case of the Rhondda Valley land slip, Attorney-General v. Cory Brothers & Co. (2). It may well be, however, that in the case of a switchback Railway there is great art and ingenuity in constructing its curves in such a way that the momentum gathered by a car in descending one curve is sufficient to carry it up the next in front, but not to carry it over the summit of the latter with a dangerous speed, but there is no art or ingenuity of that kind expended in so raising the height of the structure on which water takes stand so that the head pressure desired will be obtained, no more than there would be in selecting the site of a reservoir to be constructed on a hill-side.

The word "machinery" must mean something more than a collection of ordinary tools. It must mean something more than a solid structure built upon the ground, whose parts either do not move at all, or, if they do move, do not move the one with or upon the other in interdependent action with the object of producing a specific and definite result.

Their Lordships concur with Lord Davey in thinking that there is great danger in attempting to give a definition of the word "machinery" which will be applicable in all cases. It may be impossible to succeed in such an attempt. If their Lordships were obliged to run the hazard of the attempt they would be inclined to say that the word "machinery," when used in ordinary language prima facie, means some mechanical contrivances which, by themselves or in combination with one or more other mechanical contrivances, by the combined movement and interdependent operation of their respective parts generate power, or evoke, modify, apply or direct natural forces with the object in each case of effecting so definite and specific a result. The tank and its supporting structure do not satisfy this definition.

But their Lordships think that, however, skillfully definitions of "machinery" may be framed, the determination in any given case of what is or is not "machinery," must, to a large extent, depend upon the special facts of that case. In the present case their Lordships' view is that if this tank were fed by water, whether continuously, or as it is, intermittently, but from a natural source such as a mountain burn for example, no intelligent person would, in the ordinary use of language, describe it with its supporting structure as "machinery." The fact that the water it receives does not flow into it from some such a source, but is pumped into it, does not alter its character essentially, especially as the pumps which supply the water are situated at a distance of over 300 yards from it on a holding different from, though adjoining, that on which it stands, that these pumps were constructed and worked in all essentials as they are now worked long before its erection was thought of, and that it is only the unneeded surplus of the water raised by these pumps in their ordinary operation from the underground reservoir that is diverted into it. They are, therefore, of opinion that neither this tank nor its supporting structure, nor both combined, are machinery within the meaning of the 101st section of the above-mentioned Statute of 1884; that the respondent was justified in taking the value of these works into consideration as he has done in making the assessment of the appellants' No. 2 holding; that the decree appealed from was right and should be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. Some reliance was placed by the appellants upon the case of Auckland City Corporation v. Auckland Gas Co., Limited (3). But that case is fundamentally distinguishable from the present one. What was then decided was that "the main pipes gasometers and governors" of a gas company were, when taken all together, "machinery." The appellants must pay the respondent's costs.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor, The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sagar, Dr. S. M. Sulaiman and Maulvi Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in the suit, out of which this appeal arises, are two minors. They sued Parmaoti Bibi, decree-holder, the auction-purchaser and pro forma, their father, who was the judgment-debtor. It appears that the decree holder, Parmaoti Bibi, obtained a decree against their father on a promissory-note in the Court of Small Causes and that in execution of that decree the property in dispute was brought to sale and was purchased by the defendant No. 2. The father of the plaintiffs, that is, the judgment-debtor, made two unsuccessful attempts to have the sale set aside. This suit is now brought on behalf of the minors for possession of two-thirds of the property on the ground that only the father's interest could be sold in execution of the decree, which is against him alone, and that their share in the property could not be sold.

In the Court below, it was stated in the plaint that the father was extravagant, of weak intellect, and a simpleton, and that the debt had been incurred for immoral purposes. The actual wording of the plaint is as follows:—

"A simple money-decree was obtained against defendant No. 3 on the basis of a pro-note which was executed not for any family necessity, but for immoral pursuits."

Only one issue on this point was raised. It is the second issue, which runs:—"Whether the debt to realize which the suit was filed was tainted with immorality."

There were two other main grounds of attack against the sale. One was that the property being ancestral it could not legally be sold by the Civil Court and that, as it had been sold by the Civil Court, the sale must be treated as a nullity. And, secondly, that an arrangement had been come to shortly after the auction sale, before it had been confirmed, by which the auction-purchaser agreed to accept the amount bid at the sale plus 5 per cent. and to have the sale set aside.

These two last were apparently the main grounds on which it was sought in the Trial Court to have the sale set aside. On both these grounds the plaintiffs failed. The Court found that the sale had been confirmed, and that, though it was an irregularity for the Civil Court to have held it, as the property was ancestral, nevertheless that was a mere irregularity and did not render the sale void. On the other grounds it found that the immorality of the debt of the father had not been proved and also that the fraud alleged on behalf of the auction-purchaser had not been established. It, therefore, dismissed the suit.

On appeal before us six grounds are taken. They deal one and all with the validity of the sale. The learned Counsel who argued the appeal, however, raised another point. He argued that there was nothing to show that the suit in the Small Cause Court, which was decided ex parte, had been brought against the father in his capacity as head of the family or that the debt for which he was sued was one incurred for family purposes, and, that, therefore, even if it be held that it was unnecessary to implead the father expressly as the manager of a joint Hindu family, nevertheless, in the words of Mr. Justice Banerji in the Full Bench case of Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (1) "it was essential that the manager was sued in respect of a family debt," and he asked us to remit an issue on the point for further inquiry. It seems to us, however, that the matter is concluded by the way in which the suit was fought in the lower Court. It was never alleged clearly that the debt incurred by the father was not one for family purposes. What was alleged was that it was an immoral debt, and, therefore, of course, could not be for family necessity.

The only issue raised on the point, as we have stated, was on the question of its immoral nature, and that has been found against the plaintiff, and it has not been attempted to show to us that that finding is wrong. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in a very recent case, viz., Sripat Singh Dugar v. Prodgot Kumar Tagore (2) said:—

(1) 15 Ind. Cas. 126; 34 A. 549 at p. 561; 9 A. L. J. 819 (F. B.).

(2) 89 Ind. Cas. 252; 44 C. 524 at p. 532; 32 M. L. J. 133; 15 A. L. J. 147; (1917) M. W. N. 193; 21 C. W. N. 442; 25 C. L. J. 220; 21 M. L. T. 222; 19 Bom. L. R. 280; 44 I. A. 1 (P. C.).

HARDIAL-RAM CHAND V. POKHAR DAS.

"The property in question was joint property governed by the Mitakshara Law. By that law a judgment against the father of the family cannot be executed against the whole of the Mitakshara property, if the debt in respect of which the judgment has been obtained was a debt incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. In every other event it is open to the execution creditor to sell the whole of the estate in satisfaction of the judgment obtained against the father alone."

It seems to us, especially as the point was not raised in the grounds of appeal, that we need not discuss the matter further.

The next ground raised was that, in view of the finding that the property was ancestral, its sale by the Civil Court was void in law, and for this proposition reliance has been placed on Fatmatul Kutra v. Achchi Begam (3). But that was an execution appeal. The sale had not then been confirmed, and all that the Court did was to order a proper procedure to be followed, namely, that the property being ancestral should be handed over to the Collector for execution of the decree. The point really is concluded by Behari Singh v. Mukat Singh (4) which is almost on all fours with this case. The other grounds of appeal are not pressed. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 85, applicability of—Open and current account.

One essential to render Art. 85 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applicable is, that each party must be capable of making a demand against the other during the currency of the account, and where this is not so, the requirements of the Article are not fulfilled, even though the account is current and open. First appeal from a decree of the District Judge, (old style), Lyallpur, dated the 24th February 1914.

Mehta Bahadur Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiffs-appellants claimed the sum of Rs. 3,000 from the defendants-respondents on the basis of book-accounts. The Trial Court came to the conclusion that Art. 85 of the Indian Limitation Act was applicable and dismissed the suit, at the same time directing the parties to bear their own costs. The plaintiffs have preferred this appeal through Lala Tirath Ram, and defendants, through Mehta Bahadur Chand, have filed cross-objections claiming their costs.

The point for determination in this appeal is, whether Art. 85 of the Limitation Act is applicable?

That Article applies when a suit is based on a mutual, open and current account where there have been reciprocal demands between the parties.

Counsel have drawn our attention to various decisions, viz., Ram Pershad v. Harbans Singh (1), Velu Pillai v. Ghose Mahomed (2), Shive Gowda v. Fernandez (3), *Ebrahim Ahmed v. With these decisions we are in accord, but the question must be decided on the circumstances of each case. In the present case, no doubt, the account between the parties was a current account containing items between the parties from which the balance due to one of them could be ascertained. In so far as it was a running account which had neither been settled nor closed it was also an open account. To render the Article applicable, however, it is also necessary that each party must have a demand against the other. It is not necessary that any demand should actually have been made. Both parties must, however, have been capable of making a demand. In the present case, however, it has not been shown to us that the defendants-respondents could have made any such demand at any period during the currency of the account and the requirements of the Article have, therefore, not been fulfilled.

We accordingly accept this appeal and setting aside the order of dismissal, remand the suit to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for decision of the remaining issues. The cross-objections are dismissed. The stamp on appeal will be refunded and costs in this Court will follow the event.

First appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mainpuri.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The object of the suit, out of which this appeal arises, was to set aside an auction-sale, held on the 20th of July 1915, of property belonging to the plaintiff. The defendants impleaded were the auction-purchaser and the decree-holders at whose instance the property was sold. The plaintiff came into Court with serious allegations of fraud against the defendants. We must not be understood to hold that, on the allegations made, the suit was not maintainable. As a matter of fact, however, there was no evidence worth discussing of any fraud on the part of the defendants. On the contrary, it was clear that the plaintiff had knowledge of the execution proceedings and an opportunity of being heard in the Execution Court. Practically all that was really contended in the Court below was that the property in suit, being in fact ancestral property, had been wrongly sold as non-ancestral. In the first place, the plaintiff failed to satisfy the Court below on the question of fact as to the nature, whether ancestral or non-ancestral, of the property. The oral evidence on which he relies we could not treat as sufficient in face of the contrary finding of the Court below. The point really argued before us has been that the Trial Court ought to have admitted additional documentary evidence on this point and the evidence is tendered before us for admission to-day. We think that no good case is made out for the admission of fresh evidence in face of the reasons given by the Trial Court in its judgment. In any case, however, the question sought to be raised could not influence the decision of the suit. It is quite clear that in the Execution Court the property in question was treated as non-ancestral to the knowledge of the present plaintiff, then judgment-debtor. It was in fact described by him as non-ancestral in a written pleading which he entered before the Execution Court. The Court was, therefore, within its jurisdiction in putting up for sale property which, on the admission of the parties concerned before it, was rightly described as non-ancestral. If that description was in fact a mistaken description, the plaintiff is to blame, and there is no proof on this record that he has really suffered substantial injury. On the principles laid down by this Court in the case of Behari Singh v. Mukat Singh (1) and recently re-affirmed in the case of Dalip Narain Singh v. Parmasti Bibi (2) this suit could not succeed, even if by the admission of further evidence the plaintiff was to secure a finding that the property in suit was after all ancestral although the plaintiff had allowed it to be sold as non ancestral. This appeal fails and we dismiss it accordingly with costs.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 3rd January 1919, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 15th August 1918.

Mr. C. H. Oertel, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Gurdit Singh was appointed by the Court to be the guardian of the plaintiff. He died in 1913. The plaintiff who came of age in January 1918, has brought the present suit against Gurdit Singh's son and his surety to recover Rs. 1,188-13-0 which he alleges to have been due to him from Gurdit Singh. The Subordinate Judge held that Gurdit Singh had been discharged under section 41 (4) of the Guardians and Wards Act by an order passed by him on the 9th April 1918, and that the suit was, therefore, not maintainable. The District Judge on appeal has differed from the view taken by the Subordinate Judge and has remanded the case for disposal of the other issues.

The only question is, whether Gurdit Singh was discharged by the order of the 9th April 1918. As the learned District Judge points out, it is difficult to see how the order could be regarded as one discharging Gurdit Singh when the latter had died some years before it was passed. Further, it has been held in Amar Nath v. Raghpat Rai (1) that a guardian is not relieved of his liability to render accounts unless there is an express order discharging him. In the present case it does not appear that there was either an express or an implied order discharging Gurdit Singh. What the Subordinate Judge said in the order of the 9th April 1918 was that nothing was due from Gurdit Singh according to the account filed by him, but he did not say that he accepted the account as correct.

I agree, therefore, with the lower Appellate Court that Gurdit Singh was not discharged, and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6 (a)— Release of reversionary rights in favour of widow in Appeal.

A relinquishment deed, which purports to be a transfer of reversionary rights, in favour of a widow in possession of her deceased husband's estate by the brother of her husband, is against the provisions of section 6 (a), of the Transfer of Property Act, and, therefore, cannot vest an absolute estate in the widow. Such a relinquishment deed is not a family arrangement, and nor would it operate as an estoppel, inasmuch as if she alienated the property in her lifetime, she, being in possession as a widow, could dispose of it in any event, while an estoppel could only take effect if she purported to deal with the property relying upon the deed of relinquishment.

The question of costs cannot form the subject-matter of an appeal by itself unless some important principle is involved, but where an appeal is heard on its merits, it is open to the Court of Appeal to consider the question of costs.

Appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Kajiji.

Messrs. Desai and Kania, for the Appellant.
Mr. Jinnah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who died pending the hearing of the suit, claimed to set aside a document executed by him on the 6th November 1917, by which he purported to release all his rights as a reversioner in the estate of his deceased brother Virji, in favour of his widow Sunderabai. Really, the document of the 6th November 1917 transgressed against the provisions of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, and, therefore, could not take effect as vesting in the widow the absolute estate in the property left by her husband. She might have disposed of the immoveable property in her lifetime, but she had not done so, and, therefore, on her death, the property would go to her nearest reversioner. However, Sunderabai made a Will apparently thinking that she was absolutely entitled to her husband's estate, and her executor, the first defendant, resists the plaintiff's claim.

It was first suggested that the transaction evidenced by the relinquishment deed of 6th November 1917 was a family arrangement, and, therefore, should be given effect to. But on reading that document it will be clearly seen that it purports to be a transfer of Mulji's right as a reversionary heir in the estate of his deceased brother.

Then the first defendant objected to the plaintiff's suit on the ground of estoppel. It is difficult to see how there could be any estoppel, as that estoppel could only take effect, if Sunderabai in her lifetime, relying upon the relinquishment deed, purported to deal with the property, which she could have done in any event and, therefore, the relinquishment deed could have had no effect with regard to any alienations she might have made in her lifetime. But as she possessed the property in fact, there is nothing on which the estoppel could act, and on her death it went in the ordinary course of law to the reversioner. The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

But the appellants object to the order made in the lower Court directing the first defendant, as executor of Sunderabai, to pay the plaintiff's costs of the suit. That could not form the subject-matter of an appeal by itself, unless it could be said that some important principle was involved. But now as we are hearing the appeal on its merits it is open to us to consider whether it is right in a suit of this character, that the plaintiff should get his costs from the first defendant. He claimed far more than what he was entitled to, and also made allegations in the plaint that by some means or other he was wrongfully induced to relinquish his reversionary rights, and considering that he was responsible for all the troubles which have arisen, we certainly think it is not just to make the first defendant pay the plaintiff's costs of the suit. The order of the lower Court will be varied by directing that as between the plaintiff and the first defendant each party is to pay his own costs. The appellant's will pay the costs of the appeal.

S. his near collaterals brought the present suit for possession of his estate on the ground that P. S. was not his legitimate son:

Held, that the suit must fail, as the plaintiffs were not competent to deny the legitimacy of K. S.

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Montgomery, dated the 31st October 1916.

Messrs. Aziz Ahmad and Muhammad Rafi, for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Amar Nath Chopra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Kahan Singht, who was owner of land both in the Lahore and Montgomery Districts, had married two wives but had no issue. He was persuaded that if he married a Muhammadan woman she could bear him a son and he, therefore, took unto himself an Arain woman named Musammât Jawai who bore him a son named, Partap Singh in 1892. In 1903 Kahan Singh gifted his property in the Montgomery District to Partap Singh who obtained mutation in September 1904, and after the death of Kahan Singh in January 1905 Partap Singh obtained mutation of the Lahore land also as his father's heir.

The present suit is by a number of near collaterals, all of whom are descendants of the father of Kahan Singh, and they claim the land gifted to and inherited by Partap Singh on the grounds that Kahan Singh was not competent to alienate his land by gift in the presence of his collaterals and that Partap Singh is not his lawful heir.

It was pleaded inter alia that Musammât Jawai having been previously converted to Sikhism was married to Kahan Singh by Sikh rites; and if these facts are established, there can be no doubt that Partap Singh is the legitimate son of Kahan Singh, vide Dalip Kaur v. Fatti (1). Although, however, issues were framed on the two questions of conversion and marriage, the Subordinate Judge did not decide them but dismissed the suit on the ground that, although the parties were governed by custom the plaintiffs were precluded from maintaining their action by reason of the consent of their ancestors which had not been shown to be collusive or wrongful.

Exhibit D I is an agreement, dated the 22nd April 1889 in which Kahan Singh recited the history of his married life and explained how all his near collaterals had agreed to his marriage with Musammât Jawai and how with their permission he had performed with her the chadar andazi ceremony in accordance with Hindu doctrines. This agreement, as is not denied, was signed by his brother Daya Singh, by Jhanda Singh and Sada Singh sons of Daya Singh who are now defendants Nos. 2 and 3, by Chatter Singh, his nephew, since deceased, and by Jaimal Singh and Buta Singh, sons of Chatter Singh who are now defendants Nos. 4 and 5. Subsequently on the 16th October 1893 a further agreement was executed by the said Jaimal Singh in which he recited the fact that with the consent of collaterals Kahan Singh had married Musammât Jawai by chadar andazi and that the child born of their union was formally acknowledged as his lawful son. He went on to say that he would treat Partap Singh or any other male child lawfully born thereafter from the womb of Musammât Jawai as having been born of the Sikh woman and would not bring any claim in respect of the property left by the said Kahan Singh. This document (Exhibit D-IV) was registered. There is another similar document (Exhibit D III) dated the 17th August 1893 executed by Daya Singh and Buta Singh as well as by Jaimal Singh.

Subsequently, after the death of Kahan Singh, defendants Nos. 2 to 5 allowed Partap Singh to redeem from them land which had been mortgaged by Kahan Singh.

Nevertheless in 1914 defendants Nos. 2 to 5 instituted a suit for possession of the very land which is now in dispute. That suit was dismissed in default as the plaintiffs absented themselves for the obvious reason that in the face of their previous agreements they had no hopes of success.

The present plaintiffs are all sons and grandsons of defendants Nos. 2 to 5, and Counsel who has appeared for them before us has not even attempted to show that the acts of their ancestors were collusive or improper. Indeed there appears to be no doubt that they made a perfectly genuine agreement with Kahan Singh that he might marry Musammatt Jawai and that they would recognise his offspring from her as legitimate.

Counsel for the appellants has argued that the question of legitimacy is one of law and that for that reason the plaintiffs appellants cannot be estopped from urging that Partap Singh is not legitimate. The answer is that defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and their fathers did much more than acknowledge that Partap Singh was legitimate and that by their agreement to recognise Musammatt Jawai as a lawful wife, they altered the whole course of the lives of both Kahan Singh and Musammatt Jawai. There is no reason to suppose that Musammatt Jawai or her parents would have consented to her living with Kahan Singh except as a recognised wife and if she did not go to him as such Partap Singh would never have been born. Similarly if Kahan Singh had not been assured by his near relatives that they would recognise Musammatt Jawai as his wife, it would have been open to him in order to get a son to marry some other woman to whom no objection could possibly be raised. The agreement (Exhibit D.I) which, as already stated, is signed by all near relatives, shows that he was a particular man who was not prepared to enter on a union which would be considered as irregular but that he had a strong desire to obtain a son, and the presumption is that he would have done all that lay in his power to satisfy his wish. By their action his relatives left him to live and die in the belief that his wish had been satisfied. Counsel for the appellants has referred us to Tek Chand v. Gopal Devi (2). As already pointed out, we are not dealing here with mere representations in law, and one of the Judges who was a party to that ruling was also a party to Civil Appeal No. 1894 of 1913 (unpublished) which is quoted at length and with approval in Chuhar v. Jas Kaur (3) a ruling which is very pertinent in the present case.

We have no hesitation in holding that the plaintiffs appellants are not competent to deny the legitimacy of Partap Singh, and we, therefore, dismiss their appeal with costs.

For a document to create a charge on immoveable property under section 100, Transfer of Property Act, it must be a document that creates such charge immediately on its execution and not one that merely creates a charge that operates at some future time. [p. 940, col. 1.]

Madho Misser v. Sidh Binaik Upadhyay, 14 C. 687; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 456, relied upon.

Article 132, Schedule I to the Limitation Act, is wide enough to apply to all cases where there is an effective and binding charge upon immoveable property whether created under the Transfer of Property Act or otherwise. [p. 940, col. 1.]

Fazul Nishan v. Muhammadji, 33 P. R. 1897, followed.

Obiter.—A suit to recover rent reserved by a registered instrument is governed by Article 116 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 27th March

Pandit Shoo Narain, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. Raj Narain and Kanwar Dalip Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which the present second appeal arises the Municipal Committee, Delhi, plaintiff, sued Abdul Samad, defendant-appellant, for recovery of Rs. 1,499-15 6 on account of rent recoverable from certain amlā standing upon a specified plot of land, and in case the whole amount could not be recovered from the said amlā, it was prayed that the balance might be recovered from the person and other property of the defendant. The lower Appellate Court has held that the plaintiff, under the terms of the kabuliyat, Exhibit P-2, had a charge upon the superstructure on the land and that, therefore, Article 132 of the Limitation Act applied as regards the claim against that property. It further held that as the kabuliyat was a registered document, Article 116 of the Limitation Act applied so far as the claim was against the person and other property of the defendant. It accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim, and the defendant has filed a second appeal to this Court.

The brief facts are as follows:—The land was originally leased along with other land by the Municipal Committee to one Muhammad Ishaq. The latter transferred his rights in the plot in dispute to Nanak Chand and Jhabban Lal who themselves attorned to the Committee by the kabuliyat of the 11th January 1905. This kabuliyat provides for the payment of rent amounting to Rs. 20 8-0 per mensem, and the 5th clause contains the words ba zdm adaiji amlā maujudā upar arazi se kiraya se Committee ko wazul karne ka kull iktidar hoga. Pandit Shoo Narain who appeared on behalf of the appellant argued that the word amlā meant the materials of the building on the land leased and not the actual building or superstructure itself. We have consulted three dictionaries in order to find out what the meaning of this word “amlā” is. In Fallon's Hindustani Dictionary it is said to mean materials; in Platts' Hindustani Dictionary and Steingass' Persian-English Dictionary the meaning is given as premises, building or materials of a dilapidated house. The 4th clause of the kabuliyat gives the lessees authority to mortgage or sell the amla standing on the land subject to the other conditions of the deed. We think it is clear from this and from the other clauses of the deed that the word "amla" was intended to mean the actual building or superstructure on the land and not merely the materials.

The next argument of Pandit Sheo Narain was that no charge upon the building can be said to have been created within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. In Modho Mimer v. Sidh Binoik Upadhyay (1) it was held that for a document to create a charge on immoveable property under section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, it must be a document that creates such charge immediately on its execution, and not one that merely creates a charge that operates at some future time. Again, in Gour's Transfer of Property Act, 4th Edition, at pages 1255-56 it is said: "Where a charge is created by a document it must be a document that creates such charge immediately on its execution and which, therefore, does not operate only as a charge at some future time, such as in the event of non-payment of money secured by it,—the latter being the possibility of a 'charge' ultimately arising on the land, not 'a charge' within the meaning of the section." It was not seriously contended by Mr. Raj Narain on behalf of the respondent that a charge was immediately created by the kabuliyat, and in our opinion it is clear that no charge was so created within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. Article 132 of the Limitation Act is wide enough, however, to apply to all cases where there is an effective and binding charge upon immoveable property whether created under the Transfer of Property Act or otherwise. What was done in this case was, to make the building for the time being liable for any unpaid rent; in other words, the building was hypothecated for the due payment of the rent. In Fazul Nishan v. Muhammadji (2), quoted in its judgment by the lower Appellate Court, it was held that where property was hypothecated by a guardian appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act, for the due performance of his duty, Article 132 of the Limitation Act was applicable. We, therefore, agree with the lower Appellate Court that the building standing on the land was hypothecated for the due payment of the rent.

Another argument put forward by Pandit Sheo Narain was that even if it be considered that the building was charged with the payment of the rent, still the right of residence was not so charged and the building could not be sold as a whole, and that if it were sold for payment of the rent, the purchaser would have to remove the materials. He argues, therefore, that what was really charged was the materials, in other words, moveable property. We cannot accept this argument. It may be that the purchaser would have to remove the materials, but the building itself was charged and we are, therefore, clear that under the kabuliyat the Municipal Committee had a charge on the immoveable property and that Article 132 of the Limitation Act is applicable.

Another point was whether the kabuliyat being a registered one, a suit to recover rent would be governed by Article 115 or 116 of the Limitation Act. Pandit Sheo Narain points out that the Allahabad High Court has held that suits for rent are governed by Article 110 of the Limitation Act even if the deed of rent is a registered one. He admits, however, that the other High Courts have held that in such a case Article 114 is applicable. In our opinion Article 116 is applicable as held by the lower Appellate Court, but the matter is not really of much importance as the parties admit that the whole amount of the rent decreed has already been paid into Court and the necessity to realize any part of it from the person or other property of the defendant will not arise.

As we have held that the 12 year rule applies, it is not necessary for us to discuss the question of appropriation of payments. The plaintiff has defaulted from its claim the sum of Rs. 837 which was due from it to the defendant and has only claimed the balance.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mr. Pendse, (with him Mr. H. G. Kulkarni), for the Appellants.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 2,575-1-0, the balance still due on a promissory-note passed by the defendant Company. Both the lower Courts have rejected the claim on the ground that the promissory-note signed by T. N. Joshi for Joshi, Patwardhan and Company, Secretaries, Treasurers and Agents, does not come within the provisions of section 72 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882, which was the Act prevailing when the note was passed. The Appellate Court has found that T. N. Joshi had implied authority to sign the promissory-note on behalf of the Company as against third parties, and there can be no doubt on the evidence that the Secretaries, Treasurers and Agents, would be the persons to sign documents of this character in accordance with the Articles of Association, and the terms of their employment; and whatever private arrangement there may have been between Joshi and the Company, with regard to the machinery in respect of which this promissory-note was passed, that would not affect the rights of third parties. The only question is whether it can be said that this promissory-note has been drawn on behalf of the Company, and for that purpose we must look at the contents of the note, and we find there is at the top of the note the heading "The Gajanan Industrial and Trading Company, Limited, Wai", and there is a rubber stamp, which was evidently used as the stamp of the Company in addition. There can be no doubt then that the Secretaries, Treasurers and Agents signed the promissory-note on behalf of the Company, and there is no reason for dismissing the claim, because the stamp appears at the top of the paper, instead of beneath the signature. The Company undoubtedly purchased the machinery, used the machinery, and was liable to pay for the machinery. If a claim had been made for goods sold and delivered there could be no answer. It seems to us that the defense is a most dishonest one. At the most it was, as the learned Judge below pointed out, a technical defense, and consequently neither of the Courts gave the successful defendants their costs. We think there should be a decree for the amount of the promissory-note in addition to the amount of Rs. 83 6-0 with interest at the 3½ per cent. from the date of the note until judgment, with costs throughout, and interest at six per cent. on the amount of the note till payment.

AMAR CHAND V. RAM RAKHA.

Plaintiff sued to recover possession of land from defendants whom he described as trespassers; the defendants in reply asserted title under a deed of sale in their favour executed by the plaintiff's guardian during his minority; plaintiff impugned the sale, and it was found that it was not for his benefit and was, therefore, not binding on him:

Held, that the defendants having failed to prove title, plaintiff should succeed without being asked to prove his own title to ownership. [p. 943, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree table is of assistance in understanding the facts of this case:—

Pirithi Mal being childless is said to have adopted Ram Rakha, the younger minor son of his brother Shibbu Mal. He died in 1902 leaving the property in dispute, which he had purchased before the alleged adoption in October 1894. In 1905 Shibbu Mal, the real father of Ram Rakha, purporting to act as his guardian sold the property for Rs. 66 to Ganda Mal, father of the defendants. The deed resited the factum of adoption and the title of the vendor rested on this fact. When he attained majority, Ram Rakha brought a suit against the representatives of the vendees describing them as trespassers, who had been in possession for some five years, and against them he claimed possession. The form of the suit is, we think, of considerable importance: The plaint did not mention the deed of sale nor was the suit one to impugn it as not binding on the plaintiff. The defendants replied urging the sale and also attacking the adoption. The finding was that the sale was not for the benefit of the minor, but that there had been no valid adoption, and; therefore, the plaintiff was given a decree for one-fourth of the property only.

On appeal the District Judge held that, whether the adoption was good or bad, the defendants, who derived title from the plaintiff, could not impugn it after accepting that adoption at the time of purchasing the land, and the plaintiff was, therefore, given a decree for possession of the whole.

The vendees present this second appeal and urge that the case is governed by Ghulam Muhammad v. Latif Ahmad Khan(1), that there is no question of estoppel, legal or equitable, and that they are fully justified in questioning the vendor's title.

We have to see whether Ghulam Muhammad v. Latif Ahmad Khan(1) governs the case and, if not, whether the sale was, as a matter of fact, for the benefit of the minor. In that case it was held that a mortgagee in a suit by minor sons for possession of the mortgaged property on the ground that the mortgage was not for their benefit, can question the title of the mortgagor in so far as to assert that there were others entitled to a share. The cases are very similar. There is, however, an all important distinction which, in our opinion, wholly differentiates this case from the ruling quoted. There the plaintiffs sued for possession on the ground that the mortgage was not for their benefit, that is to say, they made the mortgage an essential portion of the foundation of their case and then proceeded to attack it and it was pointed out by the learned Judge that they could not both approbate and reprobate the mortgage, and could not show that it was wholly void and inoperative as against them, and, at the same time, rely on the contents of the document in order to put the defendants out of Court. This is not what has happened here. The plaintiff sued for possession against a trespasser. The defendants replied that they were not trespassers but had acquired a good title by sale. This sale, on which they relied, was then impugned by the plaintiff and shown not to be binding on him inasmuch as it was not for his benefit. The defendants, therefore, were shown to have no title and the plaintiff was entitled to succeed, as a matter of right, without having to prove his own title. He had been in possession up till the time of sale, i.e., 1905. The defendants had then occupied the land and he brought a suit against them within 12 years. Section 9 of the Specific Relief Act as explained in Abdul Hamid v. Sarbuland Khan (2) does not take away his remedy and was not intended to do so. It is urged by Counsel for the appellant that this is tantamount to allowing the plaintiff to present a new case on second appeal but the record of the original Court shows that this was the position taken up from the beginning. It is true that the contest subsequently centred round the question of adoption, but this cannot alter the fact that originally the plaintiff sued to eject the trespassers, and, as soon as it was shown that the trespassers' title was bad and they were nothing but trespassers, he was entitled to his relief and the question of the adoption should not have arisen. The distinction may be somewhat technical but nonetheless it is a very real distinction. We are, therefore, of opinion that the question of adoption did not arise and that the question of estoppel and the applicability of Ghulam Muhammad v. Latif Ahmad Khan (1) did not arise either. As soon as the plaintiff showed that the defendants' title was bad he was entitled to his decree on the mere ground of his previous ownership. To quote from Abdul Hamid v. Sarbuland Khan (2) page 316. "In such a suit, unless defendant proves title, plaintiff should succeed without being asked to prove his own title to ownership, and even if the defendant proves that he (plaintiff) has no such title, section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, does not expressly take away this remedy, and was not intended to do so."

It remains to be seen whether it has been shown that the sale was for the benefit of the minor. The details of the sale show a curious state of things in that the property was purchased by Pirthi Mal for Rs. 115 in 1894 and sold 11 years later for Rs. 66. No explanation has been given of this curious fall. Pirthi Mal left a large estate and no sort of explanation has been given as to why this land should have been sold, nor has it been explained how the sale can possibly have benefited the minor.

On the above findings we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 62—Suit to recover money from son of late Pleader received for payment to plaintiff—Money received for plaintiff's use—Limitation.

A suit to recover from the son and legal representative of the plaintiff's late Pleader a sum of money alleged to have been received by the latter out of Court for payment to the plaintiff, falls under Article 62 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. [p. 945, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the Munsif, First Court, Kishoreganj, exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Petitioners.—The plaintiffs are petitioners. The matter arises out of a suit to recover from the defendant as son and legal representative of the plaintiff's late Pleader a certain sum of money received by the plaintiff's Pleader out of Court for payment to the plaintiffs. The facts are shortly these: Lakshmi Babu, the father of the defendants, died on the 18th October 1915 during the Puja holidays. When the Court reopened in November 1915 the petitioners made enquiries about their various decrees and came to know that the money received by the said Lakshmi Babu on their behalf had not been paid to them. The present suit was instituted on the 19th November 1920. The Pleader was a trustee for his clients. Therefore, under section 10 of the Limitation Act there is no period of limitation for the present suit. Even if it is not so the period of limitation would be that prescribed by Article 120 of the Indian Limitation Act. Article 62 can have no application to a suit of the present nature. Refers to Eindraban Behari v. Jagmuna Kunwar (1). This case is on all fours with the present case. Refers to Bao Girraj Singh v. Rani Raghubir Kunwar (2), Kalee Kishen Paul v. Juggut Tara (3), Gurudas Pynes v. Ram Narain Sahu (4). The last case clearly supports my contention. Article 89 of the Indian Limitation Act also does not apply to the present case. It has been repeatedly held in this Court that Article 89 has no application to a suit against a legal representative. Refers to Jhapahanesa Bibee v. Bama Sundari Chaudhrani (5), Kumeda Charan Bala v. Asutosh Chattopadhyaya (6). The Court below relied upon the ruling reported as Lawless v. Calcutta Landing & Shipping Co., Ltd. (7). But that was the decision of a Single Judge and as pointed out by Coxe, J., in Jhapahanesa Bibee v. Bama Sundari Chaudhrani (5), it has been disented from in subsequent cases.

Babu Annada Charan Karkoon, for the Opposite Party.—Section 10 of the Indian Limitation Act does not apply. A Pleader is not a trustee for his client. The property does not vest in him for any specific purpose and the present suit is not a suit for following the trust property. In England it has been held that a Solicitor is not, as a rule, express trustee for his client. Refers to Watson v. Woodman (8), Lightwood's Time-Limit on Actions (1909 Edition) 278. Article 120 is a residuary Article. It can apply if no other article applies. The language of Article 62 is clear and applies to the facts of the present case. The money was received by Lakshmi Babu for the plaintiffs' use. The decision in Bindraban Behari v. Jamuna Kunwar (1), ignores the definition of 'defendant' as given in the Limitation Act. Refers to Mitra's Law of Limitation (Tagore Law Lectures) Volume II, 948, Rustomji's Law of Limitation (2nd Edition) 316.

Babu Hemendra Kumar Das, replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was issued at the instance of the plaintiffs. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendant as son and legal representative of the plaintiffs' late Pleader a certain sum of money received or alleged to have been received by the plaintiffs' Pleader out of Court for payment to the plaintiff. The learned Small Cause Court Judge states that the Pleader, Lakshmi Kanta Chakravarty, in Kartik 1319 received Rs. 50 on account of a certain decree and that he also received in November 1911 and November 1912 certain other decretal amounts making a total of Rs. 171-8-6. Now, it appears that Lakshmi Babu died in Kartik 1322 without having made over to the plaintiffs these sums of money. The present suit was commenced on the 19th of November 1920. The suit, therefore, is a very belated one. The learned Small Cause Court Judge has stated, for the reasons appearing in his judgment, that it is barred by limitation. It is to attack this finding that the present application has been made under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Now, apart from authority, I should have thought myself that the Article of the Limitation Act applicable was Article 62, this being money received by the Pleader for the plaintiffs' use. I think that that Article would be applicable by virtue of the definition of "defendant" in section 2 clause 4 of the Limitation Act. But it is said that the Article applicable is 120 and that Article 62 has no application to the facts and circumstances of this case, and I have been referred to the case of Bindraban Behari v. Jamuna Kumwar (1), in support of that contention. Now, there is no doubt that this case does not support the contention urged before me. But as the learned Small Cause Court Judge points out, the learned Judges there seem to have taken no account of the definition of defendant appearing in section 2, clause (4) of the Limitation Act. I was also referred to the case of Rao Girraj Singh v. Rani Raghubir Kumwar (2) and to the passage in the judgment at page 437*. But that was a case differing in principle from the one before me and involving the taking of accounts. Then I was further referred to the case of Kalee Kishen Paul v. Juggut Tara (3). But that, as appears from the judgment of the Chief Justice, was a case of money advanced for the general purposes of a business where an account had been rendered and not the case, as here, of payment of specific sums for a specific purpose. Then, lastly, I was referred to the Privy Council case of Gurudas Pyne v. Ram Narain Sahu (4). But there, again, it seems to me that the facts are somewhat different. If one looks at the facts as stated at page 863† of the judgment, and as pointed out in the judgment, the suit was to enforce an equitable claim for following the proceeds of timber sold in the lands of the defendant. These facts are not such as would bring the decision within the facts of the present case. I do not think that the matter is entirely free from doubt. But, as already stated, I think the limitation applicable is that provided by Article 62. This being so, I do not think that I ought to interfere with the decision of the Small Causes Court Judge in the exercise of my discretion under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, specially having regard to the fact of the belated nature of the suit.

The application accordingly fails and the Rule must be discharged. I make no order as to costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 892 of 1919.

February 24, 1921.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. IX, r. 2—Revision—Remedy, other, open—High Court, interference by—Process-fee paid late—Dismissal of suit—Illegality.

A High Court generally does not entertain an application for revision when there is another remedy open to a petitioner, but there is nothing in the law which prohibits a High Court from interfering where grave injustice may have been done. [p. 946, col. 2]

Sheo Prasad Singh v. Kastura Kuar, 10 A. 119; A. W. N. (1888) 26; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 80, Abdul Ghunni v. Kundan Lal, 71 P. R. 1884, Harjas Rai v. Nirmal Singh, 36 P. R. 1887, referred to.

The date of hearing of a suit was 21st October. Plaintiff deposited the process-fee on 11th October at Gujrat. The office did not issue a summons to the defendant at Gujranwala on the ground of the process-fee being paid very late and on the date of the hearing the Court dismissed the suit under O. IX, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code:

Held, (1) that O. IX, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, had no application to the suit inasmuch as process-fees had been deposited by the plaintiff;

(2) that the office acted wrongly in not issuing a summons to the defendant on 11th October;

(3) that the order dismissing the suit must be set aside in revision.

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of the order of the Munsif, First Class, Gujrat, dated the 21st October 1919.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this petition for revision has arisen may be shortly stated as follows:—

On the 18th July 1919, the petitioner, Ralla Ram, filed his suit against Musammat Gur Devi. She having died the names of Musammot Bhag, Musammat Raj and Musammat Rukmini were substituted as her legal representatives. The notice issued to Musammot Bhag was returned unserved. On the 27th August 1919, the Court ordered fresh process-fee to be paid and fresh particulars of address to be given. The petitioner put in fresh talbana on 11th October

MOHESH DUTTA SUKLA v. HURMAT.

1919 but gave the same address of Musammāt Bhag which he had given before. On the 21st October 1919 when the case came on for hearing, the Court made the following order:—"The plaintiff with Lala Mul Raj Uppal, Pleader, is present. The plaintiff deposited the process-fee on the 11th October 1919. As the payment of process-fee was very late, so the summonses were not issued. This suit is pending in this Court from a very long time and has not been decided owing to such acts of negligence. Now negligence of such sort cannot be allowed. Therefore, the claim of the plaintiff is dismissed under O. IX, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code."

O. IX, r. 2 provides that where, on the day so fixed, it is found that the summons has not been served upon the defendant in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the Court-fee or postal charges (if any) chargeable for such service, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed. In this case what happened was, that the plaintiff did deposit the talbana, but the office did not issue the summons. Therefore, the case did not come within the law laid down in r. 2. The order, on the face of it, is bad and does not come under the specific rule referred to in the judgment of the Court.

Irrespective of this fact, the judgment further is not justified by the circumstances of this case. The process fee was put in on the 11th October 1919 and the date fixed for the next hearing was the 21st October 1919. Musammāt Bhag was residing at Gujranwala; at any rate, that was the address given by the plaintiff. It was the duty of the Court to have issued the summons to Musammāt Bhag. The office was not right in refusing to issue the summons. Gujranwala is not very far from Gujrat where the Court sat. There was sufficient time for the service of summons. Gujranwala is on the main line of the Railway. This order was passed in utter disregard of these facts and cannot be allowed to stand.

Mr. M. L. Puri took a preliminary objection to the hearing of this revision on the ground that there was another remedy provided by r. 4 to O. IX which the petitioner ought to have sought, and that because he did not seek that remedy this Court ought not to interfere. In support of this preliminary objection he has drawn my attention to the following cases:—Sheo Prasad Singh v. Kastura Kuar (1), Harjas Rai v. Nirmal Singh (2), Abdul Ghunni v. Kunjan Lal (3). There is no doubt that a High Court generally does not entertain an application for revision when there is another remedy open to a petitioner. But there is nothing in the law or in these rulings which prohibits a High Court from interfering even in cases where grave injustice may have been done. The order impugned in this revision cannot be supported upon any ground. At first I was inclined to give effect to the preliminary objection taken by Mr. Mukand Lal, but when I examined the facts of the case more closely, I came to the conclusion that I would be perpetrating injustice in refusing to interfere with an order of this kind.

I accept this petition for revision and set aside the order of the Court below, and remand the case to that Court under O. XLI, r. 23 with the direction that it be restored to its original number in the register of pending suits and be disposed of according to law. Costs will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.

MOOREJEE, ACTG. C. J.—These are appeals by the plaintiffs in suits for recovery of the whole value of crops. The tenant-defendant entered upon the land on the basis of an agreement in the following terms:—“(the defendant) do execute this kabuliyat for 3 years from 1310 to 1313 and promise to cultivate the land in proper time and grow roa paddy, and on its being ripe, shall thresh out the paddy and after taking my share for the labour shall deliver you your share—7 maunds—every year in Pous. If I neglect to deliver paddy then I shall pay you the price of paddy Rs. 14 at the rate of Rs. 2 per maund, and shall be liable for damages.” It may be a matter for argument, whether this agreement was in reality a contract of tenancy or whether the defendant was only a labourer who undertook to bring the land under cultivation. But we shall assume, in favour of the defendant that he was a tenant. The question is, whether he is liable to pay rent to the landlord at the contract rate or at a rate fixed by the Revenue Authorities in commutation proceedings. The Subordinate Judge has held in favour of the defendant that he is bound to pay rent annually at the commuted rate and he has further expressed the opinion that it is not competent to the Civil Court to consider the legality of the order made by the Revenue Officer. We are of opinion that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported.

An order for commutation of rent can be made only under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides as follows: “Where an occupancy raiyyat pays for a holding rent in kind, or on the estimated value of a portion of the crop or at rates varying with the crop, or partly in one of those ways and partly in another, or partly in any of those ways and partly in cash, either the raiyyat or his landlord may apply to have the rent commuted to a money rent.” Consequently, the essence of this provision is that the rent should be in reality payable in kind either wholly or partially. It is further necessary that the tenant should have the status of an occupancy raiyyat. In the present case, the tenant is not an occupancy raiyyat. The lands he holds lie in the khamar of the landlord; and, consequently, under section 116 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, nothing in Chapter V could confer upon him a right of occupancy, as the land was held under a lease for a term of years. Besides this, the rent is not really payable in kind; although nominally the rent was payable in kind, the parties had contracted that upon failure of the tenant to pay the rent in kind, the rent would be leviable at the rate of Rs. 14 annually. Consequently, there was no room for commutation under section 40; indeed, the parties had already commuted the rent by their contract.

The order of the Settlement Officer must consequently be deemed to have been made without jurisdiction; and if his order was without jurisdiction, the Civil Court is competent to declare that it was a nullity, as was ruled in the case of Jadu Nath Manna v. Pran Krishna Das (1).

SIDHU & DHANNA.

The result is that the appeals are allowed and the decrees of the Subordinate Judge modified: Decrees will be made at the contract rate instead of the commuted rate in respect of the year 1322. The appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court.

The judgment will govern all the appeals. It was faintly suggested that there might be a doubt as to the competency of some of these appeals; but clearly the decree of the Subordinate Judge has decided a question of the rate of rent annually payable, namely, whether rent was payable at the commuted rate or at the contract rate. In each of the appeals, consequently, the same order will be drawn up.

Petition under section 44 of Act IV of 1919, for revision of the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Kangra at Dharamsala, dated the 24th April 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Class, Kangra at Dharamsala, dated the 28th October 1918.

Lala Faqir Ohand, for the Petitioner.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The District Board of Kangra sold a tun tree to one Sidhu who proceeded to cut it down. Dhanna and others, plaintiffs, instituted a suit against the District Board of Kangra and the said Sidhu claiming Rs. 100 as the value of the tree, alleging that the tree belonged to them, the plaintiffs, and that the District Board had no right whatever to sell it. The Trial Court dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the tree belonged to them. The plaintiffs thereupon appealed to the Senior Sub-Judge of Kangra who granted them a decree for Rs. 60 with proportionate costs, holding that sum to be the value of the tree. Against this decision the District Board of Kangra and Sidhu have preferred separate revisions, the former through Mr. Mehr Ohand Mahajan and the latter through Lala Faqir Ohand and I have heard Lala Jagan Nath on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents. It appears that this tree was growing a few feet from the side of the road at the corner of two fields bearing Khasra Nos. 956 and 957. The lower Appellate Court finds that these two fields were included in a plot of land about 17 marlas in area which had originally been Shamilat. In the Jamabandi Ishtamali of 1887-88 this entire plot was numbered as 304 and recorded as "maqboosa malikan" and in the possession of the plaintiffs-respondents who continued to be in exclusive possession up to 1891-92. In 1900 on the 12th August a mutation entry shows that 15 marlas out of this plot were entered in the names of plaintiffs-respondents and the remaining two marlas as being in possession of Hoshnaku and Meda Ohamars. The entire plot, however, remained in possession of the plaintiffs-respondents. The lower Appellate Court appointed a Local Commissioner who reported that the tree was about 100 years old and that the plaintiffs-respondents had been in possession of this plot for a considerable period. The Local Commissioner recorded the statement of Hoshnakee who, while stating that in 1900 he and Meda had been given two marlas of this land, admitted that the plaintiffs-respondents continued in possession of the said two marlas and cultivated them themselves. Now, the plaintiffs are not owners.

of that piece of land on which this tree stands but, as stated above, are in possession of it.

Counsel for the two petitioners contended that inasmuch as the plaintiffs-respondents based their claim on their being owners of the land on which the tree stood and as the lower Appellate Court agreed with the Trial Court in holding that the tree was not growing in the land owned by the plaintiffs-respondents, the suit should have been dismissed in toto. On the other hand, Lala Jagannath on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents claimed that inasmuch as his clients were in actual possession of the land on which the tree grew they were entitled to the produce of the land including the tree as against the whole world and that only the true owner of the land could interfere with their rights. He contended that the District Board and Sidhu must be regarded as trespassers and that they must be held liable to pay the value of the tree. Reliance is placed on Abdul Hamid v. Sarbuland Khan (1) and Gobind Prasad v. Mohan Lal (2) in which cases it was held that a person in possession of land without title has an interest in the property which is good against all the world except the true owner. Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan referred me to Sir James Lyall's Settlement Report, paragraph 27, and the Gazetteer of the Kangra District, page 20, and urged that according to what is written therein the tree really belonged to Government. I do not see that this can carry the case very far so far as the District Board is concerned, for it has not been shown that the Government has made over its rights in trees to the District Board. As a matter of fact, the passages referred to by Lala Mehr Chand do not, in my opinion, establish his allegation. The land here is admittedly common land and the trees referred to in the Settlement Report and the Gazetteer are trees growing in waste lands.

After a careful examination of the arguments advanced by the learned Counsel and the circumstances of the case, it seems to me that the principle enunciated in Abdul Hamid v. Sarbuland Khan (1), and Gobind Prasad v. Mohan Lal (2) is applicable to the present case. The plaintiffs-respondents were undoubtedly in possession of the land in which the tree was growing. Whether possession was lawful or not, they clearly had an interest in the land which interest must be regarded as good against all the world except the true owner. The District Board certainly was not the true owner and, therefore, it does not appear to have been entitled to sell the tree.

Accordingly, I maintain the lower Appellate Court's decree and dismiss both the petitions with costs. In the case of Sidhu's petition I would add that I am unable to agree with Lala Faqir Chand that Sidhu was not liable. He may have a claim against the District Board but that is a matter with which the plaintiffs-respondents are not concerned.

PETITIONER

VERSUS

HEMLATA BISWAS—RESPONDENT.

Marriage, suit for annulment of—Indian Christians—Court, jurisdiction of—Fraud—Divorce Act (IV of 1839), s. 19—Impotency, meaning of—Consummation, practical impossibility of.

Under section 19 of the Divorce Act, fraud, apart from fraud in obtaining the consent of a party, is not a ground for annulment of marriage. [p. 952, col. 1.]

Where in a suit for the annulment of a marriage under the Divorce Act the only evidence of fraud on the part of the defendant (wife) is that her father knew that, previous to the marriage, she was suffering from syphilis and that he concealed this fact from the plaintiff (husband), this would not amount to 'fraud in obtaining the consent' within the meaning of the words at the end of section 19, and consequently is not a good ground for annulling the marriage. [p. 952, col. 1.]

BIRENDRA KUMAR BISWAS v. HEMLATA BISWAS.

Though a party to a suit for the annulment of a marriage may be physically fit to consummate the marriage, yet where the consummation is a practical impossibility the Courts will interfere. [p. 952, col. 2]

Where a husband is unable to consummate his marriage without the very gravest risk to his health and to that of any offspring who might be born of the connection, and this state of things is likely to continue and be permanent, it amounts to impotency on the part of the wife, and the suit of the husband for the annulment of marriage should be decreed. H. v. P. falsely called H., (1873), 3 P. & D. 126, referred to.

The case was first decided by Mr. Justice Fletcher on 31st March 1919. Then an appeal was preferred to the High Court and the appeal was decided by Sir Ashutosh Mookerjee, Kt., Acting Chief Justice and Justice Sir Asutosh Chaudhri, Kt., on 31st May 1920, when they remanded the case for re-trial. See 60 Ind. Cas. 362.

Mr. A. A. Astoom (with him Mr. M. N. Kanjilal), for the Petitioner.

Mr. R. C. Bonnerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner, Birendra Kumar Biswas, asks that his marriage with the respondent, Hemlata Biswas, may be declared null and void on the ground that the respondent had been from before the marriage suffering from a loathsome disease of syphilitic origin alleged to be incurable and contagious, in consequence whereof she is said to be unable to consummate the marriage, and the petitioner alleges that the marriage was brought about fraudulently and that all information with regard to the disease was concealed from him.

The suit was heard by Mr. Justice Fletcher on the 31st March 1919 and he dismissed it with costs; against the decree of the dismissal the plaintiff preferred an appeal and on the 31st May 1920 the case was remanded by the Appeal Court to this Court for re-trial.

It was suggested by Counsel for the parties before me that the evidence taken before Mr. Justice Fletcher should be treated as evidence before me and that the parties would submit themselves for further cross-examination if either Counsel desired to cross-examine further and that either side should be at liberty to adduce any additional evidence if they so desired. I agreed to this course having regard to the extreme poverty of the parties and the great hardship to which they have been exposed by reason of the course which events have taken.

The defendant offered to submit herself to the examination of any Doctor named by the petitioner, the petitioner did not express himself as desirous of any such examination being held, but I thought that it was better that such examination should take place and the respondent was accordingly examined by Dr. Bissesswar Mitter on the morning of the 11th March last.

Two issues were raised before me :

(1) Is the petitioner entitled to have the marriage declared null and void on the ground that the respondent was suffering from syphilis prior to the marriage?

(2) Was the petitioner induced to marry the respondent by any fraudulent allegation or fraudulent concealment on the part of the respondent or on the part of any one on her behalf?

The parties are both Indian Christians and were married at the Baptist Church, Entally, on the 15th February 1918, the respondent then being of the age of 15 years or thereabouts.

The evidence before Mr. Justice Fletcher was to the following effect. Khamutulla Chaudhury, a medical practitioner of 20 years experience, stated that he saw the respondent on the 19th February 1918 and that she was suffering from tertiary syphilis and that if the petitioner had consummated the marriage he would have got the disease himself and that he was doubtful from her condition whether she could be cured. In cross-examination he stated that he only examined her nose and body and not to see if there was malformation or structural defect to prevent consummation. He stated to the Court that the disease might be cured but that it would take time. Dr. Bissesswar Mitter, a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons and an L. R. O. P. of London, stated that he examined the respondent on the 6th March 1918 and that she was suffering from a bad type of inherited syphilis, that the disease was in the tertiary stage and that the nasal discharge of which he spoke and from which she was suffering was infectious and that any man living with her could be infected and that so long as she was suffering from the disease it would not be safe for the husband to have intercourse with her. Asked if she could be cured, he stated that this was a very controversial question and that after several years and after examining the blood he could say if she was safe but that there were several risks including that of the children getting the disease.

In cross-examination he stated that the girl was capable of sexual intercourse.

The petitioner stated that he never lived with the respondent as his wife, that he discovered she was suffering from this trouble on the 17th February 1918 and that he had never consummated the marriage and did not know before the marriage that she was troubled with the disease and that he never saw her before the marriage. The respondent swore that the petitioner had sexual connection with her and that she slept with him for one week after the marriage.

Raj Krishna Mukerjee, an L. M. S. of Calcutta, stated that he examined the respondent on the 18th March 1918, that she was suffering from syphilis which he considered to be curable, that he examined her again on the 25th November 1918 and expected she would be thoroughly cured within three months and that she could consummate the marriage. In cross-examination he stated that he had been practising in Calcutta for three years, that on March 18th the respondent was suffering from tertiary syphilis and that it would not then have been safe to consummate the marriage.

At the re-trial before me the following further evidence was called on behalf of the petitioner. Hriday Gopal Banerjee, a Minister of the Baptist Chapel, who married the parties, stated that on the 6th March 1918 the father of the petitioner made a communication to him and that as a result he went to the house and had a talk with the defendant who admitted that before the marriage she was suffering from something which caused a hole in her palate, that her father had her treated for this before the marriage without effect and that it went on increasing. He stated that the respondent said that something happened to her nose and then to her palate.

In cross examination he stated that the respondent did not say that she knew what the disease was. Dr. Bissesswar Mitter, who was examined in the first trial, stated that he examined the respondent on the morning of the 11th March 1921 and that there were signs of hereditary syphilis and he did not think it necessary to examine her private parts as in such cases private parts are never affected unless there was fresh infection during the last few weeks or months. In cross-examination he stated that sexual connection was not impossible, but that any children born of the union were likely to be infected, that if the petitioner had sexual intercourse with the respondent there was no chance of his being infected but that from kissing he might be infected and that the discharge from the nose and mouth was infectious.

I find the following facts on the evidence:—

(1) The marriage was never consummated; (2) that the respondent was at the date of the marriage suffering from hereditary tertiary syphilis; (3) that this was not known to the petitioner until after the marriage; (4) that the respondent was treated for syphilis prior to her marriage at the instance of her father who, I must assume in absence of evidence from him on this point and in view of Mr. Hriday Gopal Banerjee's evidence, knew of the nature of the disease; (5) that sexual intercourse between the petitioner and the respondent is not physically impossible and that her private parts are not diseased; (6) that the disease has not yielded to treatment, and that even if curable (as to which no positive conclusion is now possible) it could not be taken as cured until after the lapse of several years; (7) that from sexual intercourse alone the petitioner is not likely to become infected with the disease but that there is risk of such infection if the petitioner and respondent live together on ordinary terms as husband and wife; (8) that there is very grave risk that any offspring of the union would be diseased.

I gather from the judgment of the Appeal Court that the case was remanded for re trial on two points, (1) for investigation of the allegation of fraud, and (2) for consideration whether the rule of impotency said to be deduced from the American Authorities to which unfortunately I have no means of access, namely, that the existence of incurable syphilis at the time of marriage in either party forming not an absolute bar to copulation but rendering the act impracticable as endangering both the health and life of the party not previously infested is such an incapacity as entitles the party not infested to a decree for annulment, is applicable to the facts of this case.

So far as the first of these questions is concerned, I have already stated my finding on the point, that is to say, that I find upon the evidence that the father of the respondent knew prior to the marriage that his daughter, the respondent, was suffering from syphilis, and that this fact was not known to the petitioner but was concealed from him. Whether the father knew or had reason to believe that the disease was incurable I do not know but even assuming that he did know this I do not think that this would be a good ground for annulling the marriage. The jurisdiction of the Court to annul the marriage is contained in section 19 of the Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) and fraud, apart from fraud in obtaining the consent, is not a ground, and I do not conceive that fraud of the nature stated above amounts to fraud in obtaining the consent within the meaning of the words at the end of section 19.

The law in England is succinctly stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XVI, page 278 as follows: "Fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment does not, apart from duress or imbecility of mind amounting to insanity, affect the validity of a marriage to which the parties freely consented with a knowledge of the nature of the contract."

This being so, the only question which remains, apart from the question of the principle deduced by the Appeal Court from the American Authorities, is whether on the facts here the respondent was impotent at the time of the marriage and at the time of the institution of the suit. It is said on behalf of the respondent that impotency means an impossibility of sexual intercourse from physical incapacity and that cases like G. v. G. (1) and H. v. P. falsely called H. (2) mark the extreme limit to which the Courts will go, that on the facts here there is no such incapacity and that the Court has no jurisdiction to annul the marriage. On behalf of the petitioner it is said that impotency means anything which prevents cohabitation, a state of things said to exist here on the facts of this case.

(2) (1873) 3 P. & D. 126.

The construction put on impotency by counsel for the respondent is, I think, clearly too narrow a construction. Lord Pearce in the case of G. v. G. (1) says: "but the basis of the interference of the Court is not the structural defect, but the impracticability of consummation. If, therefore, a case presents itself involving the impracticability (although it may not arise from a structural defect) the reason for the interference of the Court arises. The impossibility must be practical. It cannot be necessary to show that the woman is so formed that connection is physically impossible if it can be shown that...connection is practically impossible, or even if it be shown that it is only practicable after a remedy has been applied which the husband cannot enforce, and which the wife, whether wilfully or acting under the influence of hysteria, is determined not to submit to."

In that case the marriage could not be consummated owing to the hysteria or extreme sensibility of the wife, no question of any structural defect arising, and the Court on the facts came to the conclusion that this condition of things would be permanent. The passage which I have quoted from the judgment in G. v. G. (1) is quoted with approval in Dickinson v. Dickinson (3). There is no doubt that both in that case and in G. v. G. (1) the consummation of the marriage was physically possible if force or certain other measures had been used. In the present case consummation is no doubt physically possible and the wife is not unwilling but the question I have got to ask myself is not, I think, concluded by this. Can I say here that consummation is, under the circumstances, a practical impossibility? I think it is. Upon the evidence, having regard to the state of the wife's health, I think consummation is a practical impossibility. I think the husband could not consummate the marriage without the very gravest risk to his health and to that of any offspring who might be born of the connection and I think this state of things is likely to continue and be permanent and, in my opinion, this amounts to impotency on the part of the wife within the meaning of the decided cases. I accordingly declare the marriage null and void.

In suits for pre-emption in respect of property situate in a town, however probable and seeming the plaintiffs' case may be, he should never be relieved from the burden of proving the existence of the alleged custom in the special locality in which the property is situated, proof of its existence in neighbouring mohallas being at best only supplementary of the evidence required of the plaintiff. Lala Nawal Kishore, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The judgment disposes of the three connected appeals by Ramji Das, the vendee, from three decrees for pre-emption in favour of Mam Chand, plaintiff-respondent. The appeals have been filed upon a certificate granted by the lower Appellate Court, and the only question which I have to decide is, whether the custom of pre-emption prevails in Pana Chhajan of the town of Beri in the Rohtak District. Certain oral evidence was produced on both sides, but the lower Courts have not relied much upon this and have found the custom of pre-emption proved upon the documentary evidence produced by the plaintiff. This consists of several instances which have come before the Courts. These are as follows:—

(1) Bhola v. Bhagwana. This case was decreed upon a compromise on the 6th December 1916. The property in dispute was one-fourth share in an ahata situated in Pana Chhajan. Now, it has been held in Imperial Oil, Soap and General Mills Co., Limited, Delhi v. Misbah-ud-din (1) and in other cases also that a judgment based upon a compromise or confession, although of some probative force, cannot be placed on the same footing as one in which after contest a custom was held to be proved or negatived. This instance cannot, therefore, be considered to be of much value.

(2) Jawala Parshad v. Koti Ram. This suit was in respect of a house situate in another Pana of the town. The claim was based on visinage, and was decreed on the 14th March 1910 but on appeal the decision was reversed as it was found that the suit was for a part only of the property sold, and it was also barred by time. This instance, therefore, cannot be considered.

(3) Amir Singh v. Sivala. This suit was in respect of a house situated in Pana Chhajan on the ground of visinage, and the claim was decreed on the 7th December 1871. The lower Appellate Court says that this instance relates to a period when Beri was a village, and so it is not of much value. I do not know where the lower Appellate Court has got this fact from, it does not appear from any thing on the record.

(4) Ganga Sahai v. Dhani Ram. The claim in this case was decreed on a compromise and it does not appear in what Pana the house in dispute is situated. This instance, in my opinion, is of no value.

(5) Baldeo Sahai v. Sat Ram. The house in dispute is situated in Pana Chhajan and the claim was decreed on the 21st June 1878.

(6) Har Dyal v. Sat Ram.—Here also the suit was in respect of a plot in Pana Chhajan in the town of Beri and the plaintiff's suit was based on the allegation that he was the collateral of the vendor. The date of the decree is 23rd May, 1878.

(7) Puran v. Har Bhai.—The house in dispute does not appear to have been situated in Pana Chhajan.

Instances Nos. 1, 3, 5 and 6 relate to houses or plots of land situated in Pana

(1) 61 Ind. Cas. 325; 2 L. 83.

HENRY HILL & CO. v. SHEORAJ RAI.

Chhajan, but instance No. 1 is of very little value, as the suit was compromised. As regards Nos. 3, 5 and 6—copies of the decrees only have been put in by the plaintiff, and, therefore, I am unable to say whether the custom of pre-emption was in dispute or not in those cases, or on what grounds, if any, the custom was held to have been proved. It appears that the lower Appellate Court called for the records of the cases of which copies of decrees were filed without giving any reason for doing so. Its action in calling for these records was, it appears to me, contrary to the provisions of the O. XXI, r. 27 of the Civil Procedure Code. In Natha Singh v. Billa Singh (2) the following passage was quoted with approval from the case of Saudagar Mal v. Aman Singh (3): "In suits for pre-emption in respect of property situate in a town, however probable and fair seeming the plaintiff's claim may be, he should never be relieved from the burden of proving the existence of the alleged custom in the special locality in which the property is situate, proof of its existence in neighbouring mohallas being at best only supplementary of the evidence required of the plaintiff." I fully agree with these remarks. In my opinion the onus which lay upon the plaintiff to prove the existence of the custom in the Pana in question was a heavy one and I do not consider that the instances cited by him, the most recent of which took place more than 40 years ago, are sufficient to prove the existence of the custom. A local Commissioner was appointed to make an enquiry, and his report was that there have been 30 sales of houses in this Pana in the years 1915 to 1918, and that no suit had been brought in respect of any of them, that the general feeling in the locality is against the existence of the custom, and that no such custom prevails in the Pana in question. The enquiry was made by Lala Lashman Das, a certificated Mukhtar, and his report appears to me to be entitled to weight. I hold that the existence of the custom in Pana Chhajan has not been affirmatively proved, and I accept the appeal and, setting aside the orders of the lower Court, dismiss all the suits with costs throughout.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 2 (5), 26, 28, Sch. I, Art. 144—Right of fishery—Easement—Profit a prendre—Fishery, right of—Adverse possession.

A right of fishery, of whatever nature, is not strictly an easement. It is either an interest in immovable property or a profit a prendre which may be either in gross or appurtenant to a dominant tenement. In so far as a right of fishery is a mere profit a prendre which is not an exclusive right to the fishing it would clearly come within the provisions of the definition of 'easement' given in section 2 (5) of the Limitation Act. If it is an exclusive right to the fishing, as in the case of a several fishery, it would amount to an interest in immovable property within Art. 144 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, and adverse possession of such a right for 12 years would, by the operation of section 28 of the Act, extinguish the rights of the lawful owners. [p. 956, col. 2; p. 957, col. 1.]

A profit a prendre in the nature of an easement, which can be acquired by 20 years' enjoyment must be a right which does not exclude the acquisition of similar rights by others or bar the enjoyment of such rights by the lawful owners of the land. It may be either a personal right which is not transferable or one attached to a dominant tenement, as in the case of an easement properly so-called, which also cannot be transferred apart from the transfer of the dominant tenement. An exclusive right to the fishing in a particular locality, as in the case of a several fishery, is both transferable and heritable and is an interest in immovable property and one which can be acquired by 12 years' adverse possession as against the lawful owner. [p. 957, col. 1.]

The question of a right of fishery in all cases must be determined by reference to the nature of the right claimed and proved to have been exercised. If it is a mere right to fish not excluding the lawful owner, it would appear to be an easement within the description of the word in the Limitation Act and can be acquired by 20 years' uninterrupted enjoyment. If it is an exclusive right of fishery it is an interest in immovable property and can be acquired by 12 years' adverse possession involving an ouster of the rightful owner. Such a right contains all the essential elements of property and even if it may properly be described as a profit a prendre it has also the distinctive features of an interest in immovable property. Even if section 26 of the Act should be applicable, this would not bar the operation of Art. 144 and section 28 if the right came under both descriptions. [p. 959, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, in Second Appeal No. 513 of 1919, dated the 21st December 1920.

Messrs. P. Kennedy and Baikuntha Nath Mitter, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay and Sambhu Saran, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent from a decision of Jwala Prasad, J., which comes before us for final determination after remand to the first Appellate Court for certain findings of fact.

The plaintiffs first party are the tenure-holders of Mauza Madhubani in Champaran under an istimarrari mokurrari lease granted by the proprietors, the Bettiah Raj. The plaintiffs-second party are the lessees of the jalkar rights in the mauza under a ticca lease granted by the tenure holders. The defendants, who are the tenants in occupation of the land over which the plaintiffs claim the jalkar right, have interfered with the exercise of that right by refusing to allow the plaintiffs to erect upon the land bari and chilwan for the purpose of catching fish. The plaintiffs accordingly instituted this suit claiming a declaration that they have jalkar rights over the property from which they have been excluded by the defendants. They claimed that by law and custom the jalkar rights with respect to the chur lands in the village belong to them and that they are in enjoyment of the entire Zemin-dary right appertaining to the mauza under their istimarrari mokurrari settlement which rights did not pass to the tenants of the land. They further claim that in any case they have by long enjoyment acquired a prescriptive right to the fishery. The plaint is not very scientifically drawn. It alleges that the jalkar rights over the chur lands of the mauza belong to the plaintiffs-first party according to law and custom, and that they have for a pretty long time been in enjoyment of the said rights, and in the next paragraph it alleges that the jalkar right with respect to the water accumulated on the aforesaid lands has belonged to the plaintiffs-first party for more than several 20 years, and that the ticcadars under the plaintiffs-first party have every year for a pretty long time been appropriating the jalkar produce of the aforesaid jalkar land by means of catching fishes, and, in order to prevent the escape of the fish from the water, every year bari and chilwan (wire) are put up north and south, east and west, over the aforesaid lands, and in this way the fish of the aforesaid jalkar has for several periods of 20 years continued to be appropriated and the right of fishery exercised on behalf of the plaintiffs-first party, and their ticcadars; and that the defendants and their ancestors have had full knowledge of the same. It then alleges that two weeks before the suit the defendants aforesaid prevented the plaintiff-second party from putting up the bari and chilwan. It further alleges that the suit is based on the right of easement and prescription as also on the custom obtaining in the village. The plaintiffs claim, (1) a declaration that the plaintiffs-first party have the jalkar right over the land in question, (2) an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the exercise of their rights, and (3) damages.

The Munsif who tried the suit held that the fishery rights passed to the tenant, in whom the right of occupation of the land was vested, and found that no custom had been proved whereby the tenure-holder retained the right of fishery. He also found that the plaintiffs had not made out a prescriptive right by 20 years' uninterrupted enjoyment and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed from this decision to the District Judge who dismissed the appeal and affirmed the decree of the Munsif. It was contended before him that the right claimed was, in fact, an interest in immoveable property, the adverse possession of which for 12 years would extinguish the right of the lawful owner under section 28 of the Limitation Act and that it was not necessarily an easement which, under section 26 of the Act, could be acquired by 20 years' uninterrupted enjoyment. The plaintiffs also contended that by a custom of the village the jalkar rights remained in the tenure-holder. The learned District Judge held that the right of fishery could not, without an express grant, pass either to the tenure-holder or to the raiyat in actual occupation of the land but remained in the superior landlords, in this case the Bettiah Raj, and that, in the absence of the Bettiah Raj, as parties, he was not competent to determine the question either as to adverse possession or custom, as these were matters which could only be proved as against the superior landlord, there being no evidence of a grant of the fishery to the plaintiffs. The learned District Judge came to certain findings on the question of custom admitted by some of the defence witnesses whereby the tenure-holders let out the jalkar to ticcadars but his findings on the question were inconclusive.

A second appeal to this Court was heard before Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad sitting singly. He held that the jalkar rights were in the occupier and not in the landlord, but agreed with the lower Appellate Court that no declaration of the plaintiffs' rights could be granted in the absence of the Bettiah Raj. He further considered that on the findings 20 years' uninterrupted enjoyment had not been proved. He did not in terms deal with the question as to 12 years' adverse possession raised before the District Judge or with the question of custom.

From this decision an appeal was preferred under the Letters Patent* and heard by my learned brother and Rosz, J., who agreed with the opinion of the learned Judge in second appeal that the fishery rights belonged to the occupier and held that the superior landlords were not necessary parties to the suit. They also held that the right of fishery claimed was an interest in immoveable property within the meaning of Art. 144 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act and that it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to prove enjoyment for 20 years as required by section 26 of the Act but that, under section 28, the right claimed might be acquired by adverse possession for 12 years. As in their opinion no proper findings had been come to by the learned District Judge in first appeal either as to adverse possession or as to custom they remanded the case to the Court of the District Judge for findings on the following questions:—

(1) Whether the plaintiffs have acquired any right by adverse possession, and,

(2) Whether they have acquired title by custom.

*See 64 Ind. Cas. 346.—[Ed.]

The learned District Judge on remand found that it was proved that the mokurraridars and their ticcadars had since 1899, that is, some 15 years before the suit, regularly exercised fishery rights over the land in question, but not so as to interfere with the crops, and that the fishing rights had been regularly leased to the ticcadars by the mokurraridars, but that the tenants and their labourers had at harvest time appropriated small fish such as could be caught by hand. He accordingly held that the plaintiffs had acquired the jalkar right by 12 years' adverse possession but not so as to interfere with the cultivation of crops or so as to restrain the tenants from catching small fish by hand. He further found that the evidence did not go far enough back to establish a custom but that there was a local usage by which the rights of the parties were as stated above. The case now comes before us with the above findings for final disposal.

The appellants contend that on these findings they are entitled to a decree declaring their right to the fishery. The respondents, on the other hand, say that the right claimed is an easement which can only be acquired by 20 years' uninterrupted enjoyment.

By section 26 of the Limitation Act easements can be acquired by peaceable and open enjoyment as of right and without interruption for 20 years. A right of fishery, of whatever nature, is not strictly an easement. It is either an interest in immoveable property or a profit a prendre which may be either in gross or appurtenant to a dominant tenement, but by section 2 (5) of the Limitation Act easement includes a right not arising from contract by which one person is entitled to remove and appropriate for his own profit any part of the soil belonging to another or anything growing on or attached to or subsisting upon the land of another. In so far as, therefore, a right of fishery is a mere profit a prendre which is not an exclusive right to the fishing, as in the case of a several fishery, it would, in my opinion, amount to an interest in immoveable property within Art. 144 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, and adverse possession of such a right for 12 years would, by the operation of section 28 of the Act, extinguish the rights of the lawful owners, in this case the tenants.

Much ingenuity has been expended in determining whether a 'right of fishery' is an easement within the meaning of that word as used in the Limitation Act, or whether it is an interest in immovable property as contemplated by Art. 144 of the First Schedule of the Act. In Ohundee Ohun Roy v. Shib Ohunder Mundul (1) it was held that a prescriptive right of fishery was an easement within the meaning of section 3 of the Limitation Act, and could be acquired by 20 years' uninterrupted enjoyment. The difference between uninterrupted enjoyment referred to in section 26 and adverse possession in Art. 144 was pointed out in that case, and, although the case as reported does not definitely show whether the right claimed was an exclusive right to the fishing or merely a right which might be shared with others, there is no reason to suppose that an exclusive right was there claimed. The distinction just mentioned is an important one. A profit a prendre in the nature of an easement, which can be acquired by 20 years' enjoyment must, I think, be a right which does not exclude the acquisition of similar rights by others or bar the enjoyment of such rights by the lawful owners of the land. It may, I think, be either a personal right which is not transferable or one attached to a dominant tenement, as in the case of an easement properly so-called, which also cannot be transferred apart from the transfer of the dominant tenement. An exclusive right to the fishing in a particular locality, as in the case of a several fishery, is both transferable and heritable and is, in my opinion, an interest in immovable property and one which can be acquired by 12 years' adverse possession as against the lawful owner.

The question has frequently arisen in connection with section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The High Court at Bombay in Bhuydal v. Pandol For Patil (2) held that a right of fishery came within the denomination of immovable property within the Specific Relief Act. The right there claimed was the exclusive right of fishing in certain tidal waters between high and low water marks, the plaintiffs being the fishermen of the village of Naogher claiming what in legal phraseology is known as a common of fishery. On the other hand, a majority of a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Fadu Jhala v. Gour Mohun Jhala (3) held that a suit for possession of a right to fish in a khāl, the soil of which did not belong to the plaintiff did not come within the provisions of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. That decision followed an earlier case decided by a Bench of the same Court in Natabar Parus v. Kubir Parus (4). That case also does not indicate clearly whether the subject of the suit was a several fishery, that is an exclusive right to the fishing, or merely a right to fish which would not exclude the owner of the land or others claiming similar rights. In the later case of Lokenath Bidyadhar Mohapatra v. Jahania Bibi (5), decided by the Calcutta High Court, the plaintiffs and defendants were respectively proprietors of adjoining properties. The plaintiffs as proprietors of Gopinathpur claimed the exclusive right during certain seasons of the year to the fishery in the waters of the neighbouring estate of Bara Banakula belonging to the defendants. The suit was one in ejectment on the ground that the defendants had prevented the plaintiffs from exercising their rights for some years before the suit. It was contended by the defendants that the right claimed was a prescriptive right to a profit a prendre falling under the description of easement in the Limitation Act and that it had not been proved that the right had been exercised within two years of the suit. They also objected that a suit in ejectment would not lie and further contended that the claim was barred by limitation under Art. 120 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act, the period for which was six years. Each of these points was determined in favour of the plaintiffs. It was held that a claim to an extra-territorial fishery, annexed to the plaintiffs' estate and exercised over the waters on the defendant's land, was not a claim to an easement within the Limitation Act, but was an interest in immoveable property and that a suit in ejectment would lie in such a case. It was also held that the period of limitation was not six years under Art. 120, but 12 years under Art. 144 of the Limitation Act, and a possessory action could be maintained at any time within 12 years of the date when the defendant's possession became adverse, the claim being one for possession of an interest in immoveable property. In that case the right set up was claimed as being appurtenant to the plaintiffs' land and it was undoubtedly an exclusive right, but I can see no reason why such a right should not be acquired altogether apart from the ownership of property by 12 years' adverse possession against the lawful owner so as to extinguish his title by the operation of section 28 of the Limitation Act. It has been held in this Court that where an owner of land has been completely ousted from the right to fish in the waters of his own land by definite acts of aggression by another, this constitutes in fact dispossession from immoveable property. Baker Husain v. Rani Banitt Koer (6). From the proposition so stated I see no reason to differ. It was argued before us that the right claimed in the plaint was dependent upon prescription and that the proof should be limited to such rights as might be so obtained. It is true that in England under the common law rights in gross which are unassignable and unappurtenant cannot be acquired by prescription but require evidence of a grant. Under the Limitation Act, however, rights of this description can be acquired by long enjoyment and if, as in the present case, they amount to an interest in immoveable property they can be acquired by adverse possession without proof of a grant. There is, therefore, in my opinion, no reason why a right claimed as arising by prescription should not aptly describe a right arising by 12 years' adverse possession under the Indian Limitation Act. All the facts necessary to determine this question were before the Court and although the point may not have been definitely raised until the case came before the District Judge in first appeal it is not a case in which the parties were taken by surprise. I agree that isolated acts of trespass, even if extending over a number of years, would not be sufficient to found a claim by adverse possession. The present case, however, is one where the plaintiffs have openly and avowedly claimed the fishing as theirs alone and have leased out the rights to ticcadars, who have exercised those rights continuously and openly and without opposition for more than 12 years.

In my opinion, the question in all such cases must be determined by reference to the nature of the right claimed and proved to have been exercised. If it is a mere right to fish not excluding the lawful owner, it would appear to be an easement within the description of the word in the Limitation Act and can be acquired by 20 years' uninterrupted enjoyment. If it is an exclusive right of fishery it is, in my opinion, an interest in immoveable property and can be acquired by 12 years' adverse possession involving an ouster of the rightful owner. Such a right, in my opinion, contains all the essential elements of property and even if it may properly be described as a profit à prendre it has also the distinctive features of an interest in immoveable property. In my opinion, even if section 26 of the Act should be applicable, this would not bar the operation of Art. 144 and section 28 if the right came under both descriptions.

It was contended, however, that in the present case there was no complete ouster of the defendants as it is found that they have the right of catching small fish by hand at harvest time. This is a matter of such trifling importance that it does not, in my opinion, alter the nature of the right acquired by the plaintiffs. I would admit the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Trial Court and the lower Appellate Courts and decree the plaintiffs' suit granting them a declaration of their rights in accordance with the findings of the learned District Judge on remand and issue an injunction upon the defendants restraining them from interfering with the plaintiffs in the exercise of those rights. Badni contract—Agent, if entitled to be recouped for loss incurred on behalf of principal—Commission agent—Onus probandi.

An agent is not entitled to be recouped for loss incurred by him on behalf of the principal in a badni (wagering) contract.

A commission agent often enters into transactions on his own account and the onus lies on him to prove that in a particular transaction he acted as agent and not as principal. [p. 960, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rohtak, dated the 25th May 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Rohtak, dated the 2nd November 1920.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Anant Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs allege that they were instructed by the defendants to sell 2 waggon loads of bajra as their agents, and that they accordingly contracted to sell the bajra to Ram Dial-Gordhan Dass, but as the defendants did not send the bajra they (the plaintiffs) had to make good the loss to Ram Dial-Gordhan Dass and paid them Rs. 260.29. They sue for the recovery of that amount with commission and interest.

The defendants pleaded that the bargain was made with the plaintiffs as principals and not as agents, and also that it was a "badni" transaction, actual delivery of the goods not having been intended and that, therefore, the suit was not maintainable. They also denied that the plaintiffs had incurred any loss.

The first Court found that the transaction was "badni," but that the plaintiffs acted as the defendant's agent and would be entitled to be recouped for any loss incurred and that the amount payable on such a transaction would be determined, not by the difference between the rate agreed upon and the market-rate, but the rate fixed by a panchayat according to usage. Finding, however, that the payment alleged to have been made to Ram Dial-Gordhan Dass had not been proved the Munsif dismissed the suit.

The Senior Subordinate Judge on appeal agreed with the First Court's findings on all the points except the question of payment. He found that the plaintiffs had proved the payment of Rs. 260.29, and accordingly gave them a decree for the amount claimed. The defendants have applied to this Court for revision.

The first point urged is that when it was found that the transaction was a wagering one the suit should have been dismissed. I think this contention is correct and it is supported by a judgment given in Civil Appeal No. 107 of 1889, quoted on page 384 of 80 P. R. 1895 [Seth Lachman Das v. Dhanpat Rai (1)] in which Plowden, J., held that the plaintiffs, who had claimed as defendants' agents in bona fide mercantile transactions, could not be allowed to alter their claim to one for a refund of losses paid upon wagering contracts.

Secondly, the lower Appellate Court committed a material irregularity in passing a decree for an amount calculated according to the rate fixed by a panchayat, as the plaintiffs had not claimed to be entitled to recover their losses according to that rate. No question of the losses being calculated at that rate arose on the pleadings, nor was the question of local usage or the competency of a panchayat to fix the rate put in issue. It was in fact common ground between the parties that it was the market-rate which had to be ascertained, and accordingly the issue framed was what was the market rate at the due date. If the loss be calculated according to the market-rate the amount which the plaintiffs would have had to pay to Ram Dial-Gordhan Dass is very small, and they would not be entitled to claim anything more than that from the defendants.

In the third place the finding as to the plaintiffs having acted as agents of the defendants is not based on any evidence. It is based only on a certain letter which has been neither admitted by the defendants nor proved. It is true that the plaintiffs are commission agents, but commission agents often enter into transactions on their own account, so that it does not follow that in this particular transaction the plaintiffs were acting as agents. The onus was on them and they have not discharged it.

I accept this application, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore the decree of the First Court dismissing the suit. The plaintiffs will pay the defendants' costs in all the Courts.

JUDGMENT.—The following genealogical tree helps to explain the case:—

The plaintiffs state that they are reversioners of Sambhu and sue for a declaration that the transfers of Sambhu's property made by Yedabai are not binding on them on that lady's death. In paragraph 2 of the plaint under headings (a) (b) and (c) the plaintiffs give the property in suit. Plaintiffs also claim the property mentioned in paragraph 2 (a) under a Will executed by the deceased Sambhu about 12th January 1896. The property mentioned in paragraph 2 (b) was given by that document to the widow to be enjoyed for her life only. The claim for the eastern half of field No. 113 of Wadner Bhatji was given up as the same is said to have been in possession of a person who is not a party to this case. The third defendant, Sayad Saidu, was joined on the ground that he is in possession of field No. 311 and defendant No. 4 Bhagwatdas was joined on the allegation that his predecessor-in-title was given field Survey No. 56 of Wadner Bhatji by defendant No. 1.

SUPDI v. MARUTI.

The rest of the property was given by defendant No. 1 to her daughter, Rewoo, by a deed of gift executed in March 1909. The case proceeded ex parte against defendants Nos. 1 and 4.

The second defendant denied the Will pleading that it was a forged document. She further pleaded that plaintiffs' claim on the basis of the Will was res judicata, as plaintiffs' Suit No. 189 of 1893 brought against the widow in respect of the property mentioned in paragraph 2 (a) of the plaint on the strength of the Will in the Court of the Extra Assistant Commissioner was dismissed on 21st September 1898. Further, that the claim on the strength of the Will was now time barred under Art. 120 of the Limitation Act, as Sambhu died in 1896. As regards the gift to her mother, defendant No. 2 pleaded that as it comprised all the property held by the widow as Sambhu's widow and it accelerated succession of Rewoo to Sambhu's estate it could not be impeached. It was she who had sold field No. 311 to defendant No. 3 and gifted field No. 56 to defendant No. 4. The rest of the property the defendant No. 2 came to by inheritance from the sole owner, her mother.

Plaintiffs in reply affirmed the genuineness of the Will and stated that the decision in the former suit was not res judicata because that suit was not dismissed on its merits but for technical defects in the frame thereof. Further, that all Sambhu's property now claimed was in the possession of Yedabai as widow's estate and, therefore, the claim by the reversioner was not time barred. It was further contended that the widow had no power to give away the estate and that the property covered by the deed of gift was not delivered to the donee; further, that the deed of gift was not validly attested. It was also denied that that deed comprised the entire estate of the deceased Sambhu. Sambhu is said to have had moveables worth some Rs. 10,000 and these and the two houses described in paragraph 2 (c) of the plaint were not included in the property given away. As regards the transfers to defendants Nos. 3 and 4 plaintiffs' case is that the sale was really effected by the widow though nominally in the name of Rewoo.

Defendant No. 2 in reply stated that the moveables and the two chhappars did not belong to Sambhu and that when the deed of gift was executed the widow believed that it comprised the entire estate of her deceased husband. The non-inclusion of the moveables would not affect the validity of acceleration of the property given.

Appropriate issues were framed and tried and the result in the Trial Court may be summarised thus. The Will was duly executed by Sambhu and the decision in the former case did not operate as res judicata. Plaintiffs' claim for the property given to their father under the Will was time-barred, that document being executed in 1896, the year in which the testator died. Plaintiffs did not take possession of the property nor sued for it in a competent Court on a proper plaint. As 12 years had expired since the death of Sambhu, plaintiffs cannot now claim. Dealing with the 4th issue the Judge finds that the gift deed of 23rd March 1909 (Exhibit 2 D-1) was executed and properly attested. At the time this was executed Rewoo and her mother, namely, the donor and the donee, were living together and Rewoo and her husband were managing the family affairs and were in possession of the property at the time of the gift. After the gift Rewoo exercised actual ownership over the property and sufficient delivery was held established. Dealing with the question whether the gift comprised all the property left by the deceased Sambhu it was held not proved that the first defendant owned or possessed any moveables at the time of the gift. As regards the two chhappars said to belong to Sambhu and not covered by the deed of gift the Judge writes:

"In the Will (Exhibit P-11) they are described as the testator's property but they were given by the Will to Rewoo and Rewoo was owner of these from the death of Sambhu. Defendant No. 1 could not be owner although she says so in her deposition. It is not shown that she was in possession of the chhappars. They fell down long ago and the sites were open and uncared for for several years. Nobody took care of these as they were of no value or of insignificant value in the village."

SUPDI V. MARUTI.

It was found that not [being held by the widow but belonging to Rewoo after her father's death their absence from the deed of gift did not affect that document's validity. The property covered by that document was found to have passed and the transfers of fields Nos. 56 and 311 were made by Rewoo. It was held that the widow had surrendered all her interest in her husband's estate in favour of the next reversioner, her daughter; and that the acceleration was good. The Judge further finds that the surrender of a widow's estate to the next reversioner would not be invalid merely because an insignificant part was left unsurrendered and holds that in the present case the widow intended to give her husband's estate to the daughter and even if these chhappars were not so given and belonged to her it would not affect the case.

The 7th issue in the case runs :

"What relief, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled to?" And the Judge holds that Rewoo could not get the property described in paragraph 2 (b) of the plaint. She is not the next reversioner in respect of this property. By the Will plaintiffs' father Ganpat was made the next reversioner of this property and the widow's power of alienation was expressly restrained and Ganpat was to get the property after the widow's death. Plaintiffs were given a declaration that the deed of gift of 23rd March 1909 was void as against the plaintiffs to the extent of Survey No. 80 and two residential dhabas and the remaining claim was dismissed.

Both sides appealed to the Court of the District Judge, Akola, who has found that the former civil suit did not constitute res judicata. The defendant's Pleader admitted in the lower Appellate Court that the Will is a genuine document. Plaintiffs' claim based on the Will was found to be time-barred but plaintiffs were held competent to fall back on their claim as reversioners. Yedabai did not take any property under the Will but took as a widow. On the findings the Judge holds that the suit of the plaintiffs is liable to be dismissed unless the finding of the Trial Court is disturbed relating to the widow having accelerated inheritance in favour of her daughter. It was held that relinquishment by a widow in favour of her daughter to be effective should be complete and absolute and should comprise the whole property. In the present case the gift did not include field No. 113 and the chhappar sites but it was found not proved that the widow ever held and possessed field No. 113 and that she was in possession of the same when she made the gift. But because the two chhappar sites were not included in the gift the gift was found invalid and plaintiffs were given a decree for a declaration of having all the property in suit.

The evidence quoted in paragraph 16 of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court does not support the finding as regards the two chhappars come to by that Court and it is difficult to see how the witnesses named could have been relied upon. Manaji (P. W. No. 12) says nothing on the question nor does Amrit Rao (P. W. No. 13). Maruti (P. W. No. 18) is a plaintiff; he says nothing; and Mahadu (P. W. No. 19) merely says that the widow used to tie her cattle on the chhappar sites but this witness has been living in another village for 10 years and is not likely to know anything about the question. Karim Khan (D. W. No. 6) who has also been relied on merely says that the sites belonged to the widow who had all the property after Sambhu's death. This evidence is certainly insufficient to establish that the widow took the two chhappar sites for the chhappar themselves had fallen down and was in possession of them at the date of the gift. But these sites have been left to Rewoo by the Will; Rewoo and her mother had been living together; and it seems probable that she may have taken possession under the Will though in the lower Court the Will was denied and fields given to Rewoo by the Will are included in the deed of gift.

It is contended for the appellant that a gift is no less complete because certain insignificant portion of the husband's property is not included therein. In Vadlamudi Gopalakrishnayya v. Vadlamudi Gangayya (1) it was held that "the fact that a small and inappreciable portion of the estate is not included in the deed of surrender will not invalidate it"; and in Sureshwar Misser v.

(1) 52 Ind. Cas. 1749.

NAJM-UN-NISA v. RAGHUNATH.

Maheshwari Misra (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council seem to hold the same opinion. There is no question as to the bona fides of the transaction. I am aware of the decision in Moti Raiji v. Laldas Jibhai (3), but prefer to follow the Madras ruling. The two chhappar sites in question were of little value, if of any value at all, situated as they are in a village and I think the surrender to the daughter was no less complete because these two sites were not mentioned in it.

The result is that this appeal is allowed. I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the First Court. The appellant will get her costs here and in the lower Courts so far as she has been successful.

Kishor Seth, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the recovery of money by the foreclosure of a mortgage. The deed of mortgage provided that the mortgagor shall pay the principal money secured by the mortgage with interest at 7 annas per cent, per mensem within 7 years. It further provided that the interest due shall be paid half-yearly and that if the interest for any half-year remained unpaid it shall be added to the principal and shall carry compound interest at the same rate. The Court below found that this covenant was enforceable and applied to the entire period for which the money remained unpaid. One of the defendants has filed this appeal against that decision but there is no force in it.

The decision in Rahas Behari Lal v. Bachchu Singh (1), on which the Court below has relied, applies. In Bundesri Naik v. Ganga Saran Sahu (2) where a deed of mortgage stipulated in general terms that interest was to run upon the principal sum advanced, without any limitation as to the period of its currency; and also stipulated that, in default of punctual payment at the end of each year, the mortgagees were to be at liberty to treat unpaid interest as principal and to recover it from the mortgaged property, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the true construction to be placed on the deed was that the capital sum was to bear interest at the contract rate till payment. In *Rameshar Bakhsh Singh v. No mistake in the mode of calculation is pointed out.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Custom—Succession to non-proprietor—Collateral in fourth degree.

In the case of succession to a proprietor any collateral, however remote, would be entitled to succeed in default of a nearer heir, but where the question is one of succession to a non-proprietor remote collaterals are excluded. [p. 964, col. 2.]

Where a collateral of a deceased non-proprietor in the fourth degree claims to succeed to his immoveable property, the onus lies on him to prove that he is entitled to do so by custom. [p. 965, col. 1.]

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued for possession of a shop, situate at the village of Simli, in the Hoshiarpur District, which was left by one Mela, who died about 10 years before suit and was, as has been found by the lower Appellate Court, a non-proprietor in the village. The shop adjoins the house of the defendant, who is a proprietor. The plaintiff contends that he is entitled to the shop as the heir of Mela, who was his second cousin, and the Courts below have found in his favour. The defendant has preferred a second appeal, having obtained a certificate from the District Judge under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act.

In paragraph 233A of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law it is laid down that a remote collateral is not entitled to succeed to a non-proprietor, and it is not disputed that this is a correct statement of the custom, the question being only whether or not a second cousin, that is, a collateral of the fourth degree, is to be regarded as a remote collateral. We are unable to agree with the learned District Judge in applying by analogy in the present case the rule under which, where the question is one of succession to proprietary rights in land, the descendants of a common great-grandfather are regarded as near collaterals.

In the case of succession to a proprietor any collateral, however remote, would be entitled to succeed in default of a nearer heir, but where the question is one of succession to a non-proprietor remote collaterals are excluded, and what has to be determined in the present case is whether the plaintiff has proved the existence of a custom by which a collateral in the fourth degree can succeed to a non-proprietor.

There is no instance on the record of the succession of a collateral in that degree, and the cases mentioned in Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law do not show that collaterals more distantly related than first cousins have ever succeeded. Attra v. Moda (1) is a case in point. It related to a village in the Hoshiarpur District, and the plaintiff was, as in the present case, a collateral of the deceased non-proprietor in the fourth degree. It was held that it lay on him to prove that collaterals more distantly related than a nephew were by custom entitled to succeed; and that he had failed to discharge the onus.

(1) 37 P. R. 1887.

We find, therefore, in the present case that the plaintiff, on whom the onus lay, has failed to prove that he is by custom entitled to succeed to the shop left by his second cousin, a non-proprietor of the village.

We accept the appeal, reverse the decrees of the Courts below, and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Note: Policy of Sea Insurance—Unstamped policy of Sea Insurance, if admissible in evidence.

The nature of a document must really be determined with reference to its terms and no general test can be laid down for distinguishing a Protection Note from a formal 'Policy of Sea Insurance.' [p. 966, col. 2.]

It may be that a document may in form appear to be a Protection Note, still if in terms it satisfies the requirements of the definition of "Policy of Sea Insurance" within the meaning of the Stamp Act, it would, for the purposes of that Act, be open to a party to contend that it is a Policy of Sea Insurance. [p. 966, col. 2; p. 967, col. 1.]

An unstamped document which otherwise fulfils all the conditions of a 'Policy of Sea Insurance' is admissible in evidence upon payment of the necessary stamp and the penalty prescribed in section 35 (a) of the Stamp Act. [p. 966, col. 2.]

The defendants executed and passed an unstamped document to the plaintiffs in respect of a cargo shipped from Muscat to Bombay in the following terms:—

"Given in writing by the undersigned persons. To wit: That we accept the liability on goods shipped from the Port of Muscat in the boat 'Jeramprasad Tandel Ibram' for Bombay Bunder. That liability is to exist up to the time the said goods have been discharged on the Bombay Bunder having passed any intermediate Ports. The insurance is accepted in accordance with the usage of English Policies without damage. The amount is to be paid within six months from the date of the loss deducting therefrom discount at the rate of 20 per cent. Through broker Thas Dewkaran. The signatures are to be duly affixed to the stamped pakka (i.e., formal) policy."

Held, that the document in question was a Policy of Sea Insurance within the meaning of section 2 (20) of the Indian Stamp Act, provided the contract embodied therein was for consideration of a premium. [p. 966, col. 2.]

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Marten.

Messrs. Desai, Campbell and Setalvad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SHAW, AGC. C. J.—The plaintiffs sued the defendants in this case on what was described in the plaint as a Protection Note, Exhibit X-1 in the case. The defendants contested their liability under this document; and among the various defences the preliminary defence raised was that the document upon which the plaintiffs sued being unstamped, the suit was not maintainable. Upon the preliminary issue the Trial Court decided in favour of the defendants, and dismissed the suit.

The question in this appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Marten is whether the document in question is a 'Policy of Sea Insurance' within the meaning of the Indian Stamp Act (II of 1899) or it is merely a "letter of cover or engagement to issue a Policy of Insurance" within the meaning of the "General Exemptions" relating to Policies of Insurance in Art. 47 of Schedule I of the Indian Stamp Act. The learned Trial Judge is of opinion that the unstamped memorandum, Exhibit X-1, falls within the exemption; and if that view is right, it is clear that, as it is not stamped, and as no stamp can be now received in respect of it, the suit will be unmaintainable.

The whole question is whether the document in question satisfies the requirements of the definition of "Policy of Sea Insurance" within the meaning of the Indian Stamp Act. The document is worded thus:—

"Given in writing by the undersigned persons. To wit: That we accept the liability on goods shipped from the Port of Muscat in the boat Jeramprasad Tandel Ibram for Bombay Bunder. That liability is to exist up to the time the said goods have been discharged on the Bombay Bunder having passed any intermediate Ports. The insurance is accepted in accordance with the usage of English Policies without damage. The amount is to be paid within six months from the date of the loss deducting therefrom discount at the rate of 20 per cent. Through broker The Dewkaran. The signatures are to be duly affixed to the stamped pakka (i. e., formal) policy.

The risk undertaken by each of the executants is stated to be Rs. 3,750. The document is initialled by defendant No. 1 and another person whose legal representatives are on the record as defendants Nos. 2 to 4. This document definitely renders the executants liable for a certain sum for the insurance of the goods shipped by a particular boat and the period is definitely stated.

Under section 2, clause (20) of the Indian Stamp Act, a Policy of Sea Insurance means "any insurance made upon any goods, merchandise or property of any description whatever on board of any ship or vessel..."

The expression "Policy of Insurance" in the preceding clause is defined as including "any instrument by which one person, in consideration of a premium engages to indemnify another against loss, damage or liability arising from an unknown or contingent event." Assuming, without deciding, that the contract in question was entered into in consideration of a premium, it would be a Policy of Sea Insurance within the meaning of section 2 (20).

It is urged, however, on behalf of the respondents that in form it is only a Protection Note or a letter of cover and that the executants contemplated a formal policy to be drawn up later. It is, no doubt, true that the document does refer to a formal policy duly stamped to be prepared; and it may be said that in form it is not a Policy of Sea Insurance. But these considerations, in my opinion, are not decisive of the question as to whether the document in substance can be treated as a 'Policy of Sea Insurance' within the meaning of the Indian Stamp Act. It may be that some Protection Notes may in terms cover a period only up to a time when the formal policy should be drawn and in some cases it may be open to an insurer to refuse to issue the policy according to the terms of the Note. Such Protection Notes would clearly be within the scope of the General Exemption under Art. 47. It may also be that a document such as we have in the present case may be in form a letter of that nature; but if in substance and in terms it satisfies all the essential conditions of a 'Policy of Sea Insurance,' I do not see any reason why the plaintiffs should not get the benefit of that view of the document. If it is a Policy of Sea Insurance, it is open to the plaintiffs under section 35 (a) of the Indian Stamp Act to pay the necessary stamp with the prescribed penalty and to ask the Court to admit the document in evidence. If it is merely a letter of cover or engagement to issue a Policy of Insurance within the meaning of the exemption, he cannot do so, and the suit must undoubtedly fail. The nature of the document must really be determined with reference to the terms of a particular document without attempting to lay down any general test for distinguishing a Protection Note from a formal policy. It may be that the document may in form appear to be a Protection Note; still, if in terms it satisfies the requirements of the definition of "Policy of Sea Insurance" within the meaning of the Indian Stamp Act, for the purpose of the Stamp Act it would be open to the party to contend that it is a Policy of Sea Insurance, and, as such, capable of being received in evidence subject to the payment of the stamp with the necessary penalty.

It is urged on behalf of the respondents that this document is merely a "contract for sea insurance," and that under section 7, sub-section (1), it cannot be valid unless it is expressed in a Sea Policy. But the "Sea Policy" or Policy of Sea Insurance is defined under section 2 (20), and if this document satisfies the requirements of that definition, I do not see why it should not be so treated. The essentials of a 'Sea Policy,' as indicated in section 7, sub-section (3), are present in this case. That being my view of the particular document, I think that it is admissible in evidence on payment of the necessary stamp and penalty.

I may refer to the case of Marine Insurance Certificate, In re (1). It was a decision under the Stamp Act of 1879. The provisions of that Act were different from those of the Act of 1891 bearing on this point. It is, however, an instance in which the certificate of insurance, which contemplated in terms an exchange for a duly stamped policy, was treated as a Policy of Insurance within the meaning of the Indian Stamp Act of 1879.

On behalf of the respondents reliance is placed upon the decision in Home Marine Insurance Co. v. Smith (2). That case went up in appeal and the judgment of the Court of Appeal is reported as Home Marine Insurance Co. v. Smith (3). It would appear that in that particular case the document was held to be invalid, as a policy, not because a letter of cover could never be a policy, but that the particular document lacked one of the essentials mentioned in section 95 (3) of the Statute of 1891 (54 & 55 Vic. c. 39). It is true that no opinion was expressed that but for that defect it would be a Policy of Sea Insurance. But the ratio decidendi in that case suggests that if it otherwise satisfied the requirements of sub-section (3) of section 95 of that Statute to which section 7, sub-section (3), of the Indian Stamp Act of 1879 corresponds, it might have been held to be a Sea Policy. At any rate, the weight to be attached to the judgment of Mathew, J., in that case is very much reduced by the line of reasoning adopted by the Court of Appeal.

The document before us is not subject to any such infirmity.

I think that initialling is sufficient to indicate the names within the meaning of section 7 (3). At any rate, it is not suggested in this case that the initialling is not sufficient. In the case of Home Marine Insurance Company v. Smith (2) the document was merely initialled, and though in the arguments in the Appeal Court this circumstance was mentioned, there is no reference to it in the judgments. Personally I see no reason in this case why it should not be held to satisfy the requirements of section 7 (3). The document in question, it seems to me, satisfies, though not in form but in substance, the requirements of the definition of the Policy of Sea Insurance. Therefore, it is open to the plaintiffs, on payment of the necessary penalty, to tender the document in evidence. I may add that the scheme of the provisions on this point in the Indian Stamp Act appears to correspond to a large extent to the scheme in the English Statute of 1891; and it may be that the intention of the Legislature was to render such documents inadmissible unless expressed in the form of a regular policy except for the limited purpose of obtaining a proper policy. But, in my opinion, the definition in the Act leaves room for the view which I have taken; and unless the definition of section 7 is amended, I do not see how such a document could be excluded from its scope.

In this view of the matter, I would allow the appeal, reverse the decree of the Trial Court and remand the case for decision on the remaining issues subject to

*Appeal—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 cl. (ix);
Sch. I, Art. 1—'Suit,' whether excludes "appeal"— Mortgage—Foreclosure and redemption suits—Court-fee payable on memorandum of appeal.*

Court-fees are payable not on suits or on appeals but on documents which are filed, exhibited or recorded in Courts in accordance with section 6 of the Court Fees Act. [p. 969, col. 2.]

The provisions of section 7 of the Court Fees Act are applicable equally to appeals as to original suits and the word 'suit' in section 7 of the Act is not used in contradistinction to the word 'appeal.' [p. 969, col. 2.]

A reference to section 17 of the Court Fees Act shows that the word "suit" is not used in the Act in contradistinction to "appeal." [p. 969, col. 2.]

Gumani v. Banwari, 54 Ind. Cas. 733; 22 O. C. 283; 7 O. L. J. 176, followed.

Neipal Rai v. Debi Prasad, 27 A. 447; 2 A. L. J. 105; A. W. N. (1905) 4, dissented from.

It does not, however, follow from this view of the law that where plaints are chargeable under clause (ix) of section 7 read with Art. 1 of the First Schedule of the Court Fees Act the memoranda of appeal filed against decrees passed in such suits are invariably chargeable in the same manner. [p. 969, col. 2.]

A suit may change its nature in appeal and though the original suit may be for redemption or foreclosure there may be no question raised in appeal as to the right to redeem or foreclose and the appeal may be merely in respect of the amount which the Court of first instance has held to be payable. In such a case the suit in appeal would clearly not be a suit falling within the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 and the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute would not be computed in accordance with the provisions of that clause but would be a specified sum, the Court-fee payable on which would be ad valorem in accordance with the provisions of Art. 1 of Schedule I of the Act. [p. 970, col. 1.]

Ram Lakhan Rai v. Bandan Rai, Legal Remembrancer, Vol. I, p. 162, referred to.

If a suit for redemption or foreclosure is dismissed, the Court-fee payable by the plaintiff-appellant on his memorandum of appeal ought to be computed in accordance with the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act, that is, according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage. [p. 970, col. 2.]

If a suit to redeem is decreed and the defendant-appellant merely challenges the right to redeem, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal ought also to be computed in accordance with the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act. [p. 970, col. 2.]

If a suit to redeem or foreclose is decreed and the plaintiff or the defendant in appeal merely challenges the amount to be paid or received without questioning the right to redeem or foreclose, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal will be on the subject-matter in dispute, that is, on the additional amount claimed or the amount in respect of which the appellant seeks to avoid liability. [p. 970, col. 2.]

Where in a foreclosure suit a decree is passed for a certain sum in default of payment of which within a fixed time the property shall be foreclosed and the defendant in appeal denies the plaintiff's right to foreclose on the ground that he is not liable to pay any portion of the sum decreed, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal ought to be calculated ad valorem on the subject-matter in dispute according to Art. 1 of Schedule I, that is, on the amount of the decree the payment of which the defendant by his appeal seeks to avoid. [p. 970, col. 2.]

Where a decree is passed for redemption on payment of a certain sum and in appeal the defendant not only denies the plaintiff's right to redeem but in the alternative claims that if he be entitled to redeem he can do so only on payment of a larger sum than that fixed by the Court of first instance, the Court-fee ought to be paid on the relief which is liable to pay the higher fee; on the former the fee would be computed in accordance with the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 read with Art. 1 of Schedule I and on the latter the Court-fee would be ad valorem on the difference between the amount found due by the lower Court and that claimed by the appellant. [p. 971, col. 1.]

Kashinath Narayan v. Govinda, 15 B. 82; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 56 and Lachhman Singh v. Bahadur Singh, 22 Ind. Cas. 642; 16 O. C. 354, referred to.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rai Bareli, dated the 31st August 1920.

Mr. Rajeshwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in a foreclosure suit. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 29,319-11-4 on the basis of two mortgage-deeds and two deeds of further charge. He was given a decree for Rs. 14,684-13-8 under O. XXXIV, r. 2 of the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, the amount due on the two mortgage-deeds and one of the deeds of further charge. The defendant is the appellant in this Court. In his grounds of appeal he claims that the suit is barred by limitation, challenges the validity of the deed of further charge and alleges that the entire mortgage-debt has been paid off from the usufruct of the property. He has paid Court fee only on the principal amount secured by the mortgage-deeds. The office has reported that the fee paid is insufficient and that it should have been paid on the whole amount in respect of which the appellant seeks to avoid liability.

The question as to the Court-fees payable in appeals in redemption or foreclosure suits has been the subject of much discussion. It has been held in the case of Nepal Rai v. Debi Prasad (1) that clause (ix) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act is applicable to suits only and not to appeals and this ruling was accepted as good law in Reference under the Court Fees Act, 1870 (2). In the latter ruling the learned Chief Justice based his opinion on the fact that sub section (e) of clause (iv) of section 7 specially provides for a memorandum of appeal while there is no such provision in clause (ix) of that section and also on the fact that section 16 which has since been repealed seemed to show that the general policy of the Legislature was to make the value of the subject-matter in dispute in appeal the criterion for the purpose of computing the fee. With the greatest respect we find ourselves unable to accept this view of the law. The question has already been discussed by a Single Judge of this Court in Gumari v. Banwari (3), and we are in full agreement with the view taken by the learned Judge in that case that the provisions of section 7 of the Court Fees Act are applicable equally to appeals as to original suits and that the word suit in section 7 of the Act is not used in contradistinction to the word appeal. Court-fees are payable not on suits or on appeals but on documents which are filed, exhibited or recorded in Courts in accordance with section 6 of the Court Fees Act. Section 7 of the Court Fees Act merely provides that the fees payable in suits of the nature specified in the section shall be computed in the manner prescribed. But in order to determine the actual amount of the fees payable on any plaint or memorandum of appeal in any such suit it is necessary to refer to Art. 1 of Schedule I of the Act. The words "not otherwise provided for in this Act" in that Article seem to apply to special provisions for plaints or memoranda of appeal made in other Articles of the Schedule. A reference to section 17 of the Act shows clearly that the word "suit" is not used in the Act in contradistinction to "appeal." Section 17 provides that where a suit embraces two or more distinct subjects the plaint or memorandum of appeal shall be chargeable with the aggregate amount of the fees to which the plaints or memoranda of appeal in suits embracing separately each of such subject would be liable under the Act. It does not, however, follow from this view of the law that where plaints are chargeable under clause (ix) of section 7 read with Art. 1 of the First Schedule of the Court Fees Act the memoranda of appeal filed against decrees passed in such suits are invariably chargeable in the same manner.

SANGAT BAKHSH SINGH v. RAWAT DIJMO BAKHSH SINGH.

As has been pointed out in the case of Ram Lakhan Rai v. Bandan Rai (4) and in Mohammad Husain v. Syed Jahan Begam (5) a suit may change its nature in appeal and though the original suit may be for redemption or foreclosure there may be no question raised in appeal as to the right to redeem or foreclose and the appeal may be merely in respect of the amount which the Court of first instance has held to be payable. In such a case the suit in appeal would clearly not be a suit falling within the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7, and the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute would not be computed in accordance with the provisions of that clause but would be a specified sum, the Court-fee payable on which would be ad valorem in accordance with the provisions of Art. 1 of Schedule I of the Act. And in a suit on a mortgage for foreclosure the decree granted to the plaintiff is a decree for the payment of a specific sum in default of payment of which within a certain time the mortgaged property will be foreclosed. If the defendant in appeal denies the plaintiff's right to a decree on the ground that he is not liable to pay any portion of the amount decreed the suit in appeal becomes in effect a suit to avoid the payment of a specific sum and the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal would, therefore, be calculated ad valorem on the subject-matter in dispute according to Art. 1 of Schedule I.

Again an appeal against a decree for redemption may not only deny the plaintiff's right to redeem at all but may also in the alternative claim that he is entitled to redeem only on the payment of a much higher sum than that found by the lower Court. In such a case the memorandum of appeal asks for two alternative reliefs on one of which the Court-fee would be computed according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage and on the other would be an ad valorem fee in accordance with the provisions of Art. 1 of Schedule I of the Act and the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal would be on the higher of the two alternative reliefs as held in Kashinath Narayan v. Govinda (6), which was followed by a Single Judge of this Court in Lachhman Singh v. Bahadur Singh (7). These considerations lead us to conclusions which may be tabulated as follows:—

(1) If a suit for redemption or foreclosure has been dismissed the Court-fee payable by the plaintiff-appellant on his memorandum of appeal will be computed in accordance with the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act, that is, according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage. In such a case clearly the suit has not changed its nature in appeal.

(2) If a suit to redeem has been decreed and the defendant-appellant merely challenges the right to redeem, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal will be computed in accordance with the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act. Here again there is no change in the nature of the suit.

(3) If a suit to redeem or foreclose has been decreed and the plaintiff or the defendant in appeal merely challenges the amount to be paid or received without questioning the right to redeem or foreclose, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal will be on the subject-matter in dispute, that is, on the additional amount claimed or the amount in respect of which the appellant seeks to avoid liability. In this case the suit has clearly changed its nature in appeal, and is no longer a suit falling within the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 of the Act.

(4) Where in a foreclosure suit a decree has been passed for a certain sum in default of payment of which within a fixed time the property shall be foreclosed and the defendant in appeal denies the plaintiff's right to foreclose on the ground that he is not liable to pay any portion of the sum decreed, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal will be calculated ad valorem on the subject-matter in dispute according to Art. 1 of Schedule I, that is, on the amount of the decree the payment of which the defendant by his appeal seeks to avoid. In this case the suit has clearly changed its nature in appeal and has become a suit to avoid the payment of a specific sum.

(7) 22 Ind. Cas. 642; 16 O. C. 754.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. AHMED BADSHA SAHIB.

(5) Where a decree has been passed for redemption on payment of a certain sum and in appeal the defendant not only denies the plaintiff's right to redeem but in the alternative claims that if he be entitled to redeem he can do so only on payment of a larger sum than that fixed by the Court of first instance, the Court-fee will be paid on the relief which is liable to pay the higher fee; on the former the fee would be computed in accordance with the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 read with Art. 1 of Schedule I, and on the latter the Court-fee would be ad valorem on the difference between the amount found due by the lower Court and that claimed by the appellant.

Though the reasoning in some cases is different this construction of the Act does not appear to be in conflict with any of the reported rulings of this Court or indeed with the view now accepted in the Allahabad, Madras and Bombay Courts. The case before us falls within the fourth class of the cases mentioned above and the defendant is, therefore, liable to pay Court-fees on the amount the payment of which he seeks to avoid.

We accordingly direct that the appellant make good the deficiency of Rs. 250 within three weeks. If the deficiency is made good a date will be fixed for hearing. If it is not made good the appeal will be put up for orders on the 25th April.

N. H.

Order accordingly.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 15 OF 1920.
May 9, 1921.

Present:—Sir John Wallis, Kt.,
Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Spencer and Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri.
IN COUNCIL, REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR OF NORTH ARCOT—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Syed AHMED BADSHA SAHIB
BAHADUR—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.
Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—
Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 40, 41, 42, 48—Judgment not inter partes, plea of, in bar to subsequent suit—Judgments in rem and in personam, scope and effect of—Succession to hereditary office, how determined in absence of special usage.

Plaintiff sued his brother and brother's son for a declaration that he was entitled to the Asari Sheriff office and its emoluments and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with his enjoyment of the office. The suit was dismissed owing to the plaintiff's failure to prove his title. In the present suit by plaintiff against the Government for recovery of a specific amount due to him as the holder of the office:

Held, that it was open to the plaintiff to re-assert his title although the same was definitely negatived in the previous suit. [p. 977, col. 1.]

Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar, 6 Ind. Cas. 229; 33 M. 493; 8 M. L. T. 33; 20 M. L. J. 546; (1910) M. W. N. 479 and Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council, 19 Ind. Cas. 666; 36 M. 141; 24 M. L. J. 469, overruled.

Authorities reviewed.

Distinction between judgments in rem and in personam, their scope and effect discussed.

Per Wallis, C. J.—The effect of section 11 read with section 4, Civil Procedure Code, is to preclude the Court from refusing to try a suit or issue which was not between the same parties but between one of such parties and a third person. [p. 976, col. 1.]

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—In cases where there is no bar under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, the Court has to try the issue and if the judgment in the prior suit is filed for the purpose of proving the plaintiff's claim or for the purpose of proving the defence to the action, it is only relevant as a piece of evidence, the probative value of which is regulated by the provisions of the Evidence Act. [p. 978, col. 2.]

It is not permissible to travel outside the provision of section 11, Civil Procedure Code, and apply the rule of res judicata to cases falling outside the limitation imposed by the section [p. 980, col. 1.]

Where a judgment in personam is pleaded, its legal effect and probative force will depend on the facts of each case:

Held, by the Divisional Bench (per Wallis, C. J. and Krishnan, J.)—In the absence of evidence to the contrary or a special usage, succession to a hereditary office which cannot be enjoyed by several heirs in common, is by lineal primogeniture. [p. 982, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 186 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Ranipet in Original Suit No. 217 of 1916.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

NAPIER, J.—(October 13, 1920).—The question which arises in this appeal is one of estoppel by a previous judgment. The suit was by one Syed Ahmad against the Secretary of State to recover a sum of Rs. 394 alleged to be due to the plaintiff as a person entitled to possess the Asari Sheriff and perform the services connected therewith and to receive from Government the emoluments granted by Government to the person so entitled. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not entitled to the office, his claim having been negatived by the judgment of the High Court in Second Appeal No. 726 of 1913 and also that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata.

The issue framed was: "whether the plaintiff's right to the office in question is concluded by reason of the decree in Second Appeal No. 726 of 1913 on the file of the High Court." The suit in that case was by the present plaintiff against two other persons alleging that the plaintiff was entitled to perform the Asari Shariff services and to recover annually the emoluments of Rs. 394 from Government without any objection by the defendants. The 2nd defendant was recognised by Government as the person entitled to the emoluments. The Court of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot on appeal from the District Munsif in that suit held against the plaintiff's right. It pointed out that the plaintiff did not claim the office by appointment either by Government or by the last holder of the office but only according to the Muhammadan Law of Succession to private property, and held that that law did not apply and that, therefore, the plaintiff had no title. In the second appeal to the High Court the judgment states as follows:—It being clear that the plaintiff has no title to the office, the declaration of title which was the principal relief claimed in the suit, his suit brought for that relief and other subsidiary relief was rightly dismissed by the lower Appellate Court."

Dealing with the second issue in this case the District Munsif held that it was no longer open to him now to sue to recover the emoluments appertaining to the office, he being concluded by reason of the prior judgment. The lower Appellate Court, however, held that the decision in the former suit did not operate as res judicata.

It must first be pointed out that no suggestion is made in this suit that the plaintiff's suit was barred under section 11, Code of Civil Procedure. This contention could not have been raised as the defendants in the prior suit were different. But the lower Appellate Court is in error in supposing that this disposes of the question. It is contended that the judgment in the prior suit disposed of his claim and that the plaintiff cannot raise this question in another form. This proposition is established in the case of Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (1) entirely apart from any question of section 11. The Bench there accepted the proposition that the relation established between the parties by a judgment is conclusive against third persons in the absence of fraud upon them. The prior suit having been between a person put forward by Government and the plaintiff, the decision as to title between them is binding on the defendant in this suit and must, therefore, be binding on the plaintiff on the well-known principle that estoppels must be mutual assuming always that the case in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (1) is rightly decided.

The same proposition was laid down in the case of Snyam Ramamocrti Dhoru v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2). There, the Bench adopted the view expressed in an unreported case, Second Appeal No. 574 of 1909, and re-stated the same proposition as was there laid down. On page 144* the learned Judges say: "The question does not depend on the application of the doctrine of res judicata between the parties as expounded in section 13, Code of Civil Procedure (old Code). That section does not cover all cases of estoppel by judgment." On page 143* they say: "The question relating to the ownership of the land was one entirely between the plaintiffs and the Barikis; and the Barikis having obtained judgment against the plaintiffs, third parties having no interest in the land at the time of the litigation cannot dispute the settlement of the dispute between them as to title, and it appears to us to be equally true that neither of the parties to the litigation can be permitted to aver as against third persons in the like position that the land belongs to himself and not to his opponent in the litigation." This judgment, again, if correct, is conclusive of the plaintiff's claim.

It is suggested that these cases were wrongly decided and reliance is placed on the judgment of the learned Chief Justice and another learned Judge in Second Appeal No. 1747 of 1917. The Court there says that the grounds on which Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2) was decided were questioned in a judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Perri Mohan Shaha v. Durlavi Dassya (3) and the Court agreed with the view therein taken. The Court also refers to the judgment of the Privy Council in Gokul Mandar v. Fulmanund Singh (4) as laying down that the provisions of section 11, Civil Procedure Code, are exhaustive. With the greatest deference to the learned Chief Justice and the other learned Judge, I think that the language of the Board has been misconstrued. I do not think the Board ever intended to lay down that there was no such thing as an estoppel by judgment outside the Civil Procedure Code. I have elsewhere in Raja of Ramnad v. Ramanathaswami (5) expressed my opinion that under the Civil Procedure Code the question is not strictly one of estoppel and that therein lies the distinction between res judicata in India and before the Courts in England. Under the Code the Court is prohibited from trying any issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been heard and finally decided by a previous Court. The section operates to bar the jurisdiction of the Court to try and goes far further than the principle under which a party is estopped from offering evidence on an issue. Dealing with this question of want of jurisdiction to try a case the Board pointed out that the first Court must have jurisdiction to try the suit in which the issue is subsequently raised and that the words of the section could not be extended beyond their provision. I cannot read the words of the Board as meaning to lay down that consent decrees, decrees by default and other judgment in which the question at issue has not been heard and decided cannot be pleaded as estoppels. In South American Mexican Co., In re, Bank of England, Ex parte (6) Lord Herschell delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal stated with regard to a judgment by consent that it "is intended to put a stop to litigation between the parties just as much as a judgment which results from the decision of the Court after the matter has been fought out to the end." Therefore, I cannot think that the Board intended to lay down that there can be no estoppel by judgment outside the Civil Procedure Code.

In Perri Mohan Shaha v. Durlavi Dassya (3) Jenkins, C. J., and Mookerjee, J. seem to have thought that they were bound by the decision of the Privy Council in Gokul Mandar v. Fulmanund Singh (4), on the subject of res judicata to hold that no estoppel by judgment could be pleaded. But they held that the previous judgment was cogent evidence against an assignor of one of the parties to the previous suit. In this case the person whom it is sought to bind is not an assignee who would of course be bound by section 11 or an assignor, but the actual party himself. I cannot, therefore, agree that what was decided in that case is any authority against the weight of the decisions in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (1) and Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2).

Reliance was placed by the respondent on Arumugha Mudaliar v. Krishnasami Naicken (7). In that case the correctness of the doctrine laid down in Suppa Bhattar v. Suppu Sokkaya Bhattar (8), was considered. But that seems to me to have no bearing on the question raised here. It seems to me that the only answer to the reported decisions in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (1), Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2) is the suggested effect of dictum of the Privy Council referred to by the learned Chief Justice. I venture to think that it in no way lays down anything at variance with the effect of estoppel by judgment outside res judicata. But as it has been doubted and as the question is, in my opinion, one of great importance, I would refer the matter to a Full Bench, the question referred being whether, in the circumstances of this case, it is open to the plaintiff to re-assert a title which was definitely negatived in a previous suit against a contesting claimant.

KRISHNAM, J.—The first question argued before us is the one raised in issue No. 3 whether the plaintiff's right to the office of Asari Sheriff and its emoluments is concluded against him by reason of the decision in the prior litigation between him and his nephew, Syed Kadir Badsha Sahib, which ended in Second Appeal No. 726 of 1913. In that second appeal it was decided that plaintiff had no title to the office. The Government contend in this suit that Badsha Sahib is the proper office-holder entitled to the Yeomiah allowances attached to the office and not the plaintiff, and that the question of title to the office is res judicata between him and the plaintiff and that they are entitled to rely on the plea in this suit and the plaintiff cannot re-open the question.

For this contention of the Government reliance is placed by the learned Government Pleader on the rulings in Srinivas Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivas Aiyangar (1), Boynapalli Venugopal Rao Garu v. Nekkala-pudi Venkatrayudu (9), Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2) and Suppu Bhattar v. Suppu Sakkaya Battar (8) which are in his favour. But on the other side our attention has been drawn to the case in Peari Mohon Shaha v. Durlavi Dassya (3) and the unreported judgment of the learned Chief Justice and Seshagiri Aiyar, J. in Second Appeal No. 1747 of 1919, both of which dissent from the view expressed on the point in the case cited by the Government Pleader. In this state of conflict of authorities, I agree to the reference of the question to a Full Bench.

In doing so, I would point out that the plea raised here is, in my opinion, not really that the issue as to plaintiff's title is directly res judicata between him and the Government but that it is res judicata between him and the person whose title the Government is setting up and that the Government is entitled to rely on that plea in establishing that title and defeating the plaintiff's claim.

In other words, we have here a plea of jus tertii and when such a plea is raised the question of title or the jus set up has to be decided as if it arose between the party against whom it is set up and the tertius or third party. In such a case, it seems to me that the person setting up the jus tertii is entitled to rely on all pleas that would have been available to the third party to prove his title whether it be one of estoppel by res judicata or otherwise. Similarly, he will also be bound by all pleas available against that third party. Even admissions made by that party could be relied on against him.

The question, therefore, in cases like the present is not in the first instance a question of res judicata between the parties to the subsequent suit but a question of what pleas a party is entitled to set up when he pleads jus tertii. On raising the plea of res judicata between the tertius and the opposite party he must show that the plea is well founded between them under section 11, Code of Civil Procedure, before he can succeed. I do not think it is necessary to pray in aid any principle of res judicata outside the scope of section 11, Code of Civil Procedure, in this case. To do so would be against the opinion expressed by the Privy Council in Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (4) and is not justifiable. So far as the plea involves the question of res judicata between plaintiff and Badsha that question must be decided under section 11 itself. If the res judicata pleaded is established under section 11 the next question will be whether the defendant can rely on it against the plaintiff; and that is not a question governed by section 11 at all but by considerations of what pleas are available to a person setting up a jus tertii under the general law. It seems to me that confusion arises in not keeping the two parts of the question distinct and separate. If the Government were not setting up a jus tertii but were only pleading that the finding in the former suit was res judicata directly between them and the plaintiff against the plaintiff's title without admitting and setting up Badsha's title it would be difficult to support their contention as they were not parties to the previous litigation nor can they be said to claim under any of those parties. The finding clearly does not bind them of its own force and they cannot take advantage of it simpliciter. It is only so far as they set up the third party's title that the plea of res judicata is available for or against them.

(9) 12 Ind. Cas. 715; 10 M. L. T. 450.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. AHMED BADESHA SAHIB.

As the matter will be fully argued before the Full Bench, I have only briefly indicated my view; it will reconcile the earlier rulings of this Court with the dictum of the Privy Council.

Mr. O. Madhavan Nair, the Government Pleader, for the Appellant.—The right to the office now set up by the plaintiff and in respect of which he claims emoluments from Government was distinctly negatived in a prior suit that he instituted for the office against his brother and brother's son. The present claim is barred. Reference was made to Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (1) and Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2).

Messrs. O. Varadachariar and Mr. S. Ranga-chariar, for the Respondent.—The Government was not a party to the previous suit. The statutory bar of res judicata is contained in section 11, Civil Procedure Code. It is not permissible to introduce any other bar not covered by the Statute. Though the prior judgment might be used in evidence, it is certainly not conclusive. The cases in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (1) and Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2) have been wrongly decided and require re-consideration. See Second Appeal No. 1747 of 1919 (unreported) and Peari Mohan Shaha v. Durlavi Dassya (3).

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—The question is whether the plaintiff is estopped from bringing this suit against Government to recover the emoluments attached to the office of mutawalli of the suit Wakf, an office which he now alleges to be descendible by usage to the nearest qualified male heir of the last holder of the office, by reason of the dismissal of the previous suit instituted by him against his elder brother, the then first defendant, and that brother's son, the then second defendant, for a declaration that their father's Will nominating such second defendant and the plaintiff's own son to succeed him in the office was invalid, and that the plaintiff by reason of his elder brother's insanity was entitled to succeed to the office and its emoluments and for an injunction restraining them from interfering with him. The suit was dismissed in second appeal by the High Court which held that the plaintiff had clearly no title to the office and that the appeal had been rightly dismissed by the lower Appellate Court. The lower Appellate Court held that, in the absence of any special provision or usage, the office devolved on the nominee of the last mutawalli, and declined to allow the plaintiff to set up a case of usage which had been abandoned in the lower Court and which was not proved. In the present case the plaintiff has pleaded that he is entitled to succeed by the usage of the institution, and the defendant, whilst admitting that the plaintiff's father was "an hereditary holder of the Yeomiah allowance," has denied the plaintiff's right and also relied on the decrees in the previous suit as barring the present suit.

As regards the general question, our decision should, in my opinion, be based on the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and the Evidence Act and on the English Law on which they are founded. The Privy Council in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (10) has deprecated the practice of referring to foreign decisions and observed that the judgments of foreign Courts based often on considerations and conditions totally differing from those applicable or prevailing in India are only likely to confuse the administration of justice, and the warning is specially applicable with regard to subjects which are dealt with in Indian Codes based on English precedents.

In England, as observed in Roscoe's Nisi Prius, page 190 "the judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon a point is, as a plea, a bar, and, as evidence, conclusive upon the same matter between the same parties," and he goes on to explain that it is conclusive (as an estoppel) where there is an opportunity of pleading it; but that, where there is no such opportunity it is conclusive as evidence. In India section 40 of the Evidence Act makes a previous judgment relevant on the question whether it by law prevents the Court from taking cognizance of a suit or holding a trial. The law which prevents the Court from taking cognizance of a suit or holding a trial is to be found in section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which only prohibits the trial of a suit or issue which has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties or "between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title." Now, the effect of this section read with section 9, in my opinion, is to preclude the Court from refusing to try a suit or issue which was not between the same parties but between one of such parties and a third person, because, as observed by the Privy Council in Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (4) "the essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on matters in respect of which it declares the law; and it is not the province of a Judge to disregard or to go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction." It is true that, as held by the Privy Council in Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (11) and in a very recent case of George Henry Hook v. Administrator General of Bengal (12), this section is not to be read as entitling a party to re-agitate a matter decided at an earlier stage of the same suit; and it is also true that it does not prevent consent decrees from operating as an estoppel; but it does, in my opinion, prevent the Court from refusing to try suits or issues by reason of previous judgments not between the same parties, a sort of estoppel unknown to English Law especially as the Evidence Act closely following the English Law contains express provisions as to the general effect of previous judgments in evidence. Section 41 makes certain judgments of a Court in the exercise of a Probate, Matrimonial, Admiralty or Insolvency jurisdiction not only relevant but conclusive evidence of certain matters. Having dealt with such judgments, which are usually known as judgments in rem, the Act goes on to deal with other judgments generally known as judgments in personam, and provides in section 42 that they are "relevant if they relate to matters of a public nature relevant to the inquiry," but are not conclusive proof of what they state, and in section 43 that all other judgments are irrelevant unless the existence of such judgment is a fact in issue or relevant under some other provision of this Act, and under those other provisions the judgment may be relevant but cannot be conclusive in law though it may in fact. Thus in Brew v. Haren (13) and Brew v. Haren (14) where the question was whether the plaintiff was the owner of the foreshore, the facts that he had successfully prevented people from taking seaweed from the shore and that he had instituted a suit for trespass in which there was a reference to arbitration and an award in his favour were held evidence of ownership. Similarly, if in a suit where the previous judgment is not res judicata under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, a question should arise whether certain property belonged to A or B a judgment by which A had recovered possession on his title from B by a decree which had become final might be just as conclusive evidence as a conveyance from B to A irrespective of the question whether the previous judgment was right or wrong. A previous judgment between altogether different parties might even be conclusive in the same way as in Re v. Hsdden (15), the report of which in Selwyn's Nisi Prius, Volume II, page 1136 is referred to both by Taylor and Rose. That was a quo warranto to try the defendant's right to be a bailiff of Scarborough. He relied on his election under two former bailiffs. The prosecution denied that they were bailiffs, and on this issue, tendered a judgment of ouster against the two bailiffs in question. On a motion for a new trial, it was held that the evidence was rightly admitted, the Court observing: "The defendant has made the title of Batty and Armstrong (the previous bailiffs) part of his right, and if he gives evidence of the right of their election, can that better be disproved than by a judgment of ouster wherein such election is declared to be void?" Reference may also be made to the provisions of the Specific Relief Act which expressly provides in section 43, that declaratory decrees made under section 42 shall not be binding except on the parties to the suit and those claiming under them.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. AHMED BADSHA SAHIB.

As regards the present case, all that was decided in the previous suit was that the present plaintiff had not pleaded or proved in that suit that there was any special usage as to the descent of the office in question which would render the ordinary Muhammadan Law inapplicable. The previous judgment not being between the same parties does not, in my opinion, estop them from setting up such a special usage in the present suit against the present defendant who was no party to the suit. In Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (1) the learned Judge, relying on a passage in Mr. Bigelow's Treatise on the Law of Estoppel, adopt the rule that judgments in personam establishing the relations between parties are an exception to the general rule that judgment in personam bind only parties and their privies.

The judgment in Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora Secretary of State for India in Council (2), after referring to some dicta of Lord Coke, which it is now admitted apply to judgments in rem, quotes the following extract from Bigelow: "If, all who have a right to appear and be heard in a cause have been duly made parties, the judgment establishes a perfect and complete right against all as much as would a conveyance of a joint estate by all the parties interested. Judgment in an action strictly in personam, indeed, binds third persons in that way; all that is necessary is that all those who have the exclusive right to litigate the cause are proper parties to it, and that the question should be determined without collusion. Judgment that A is debtor of B is an example. Indeed, the difference between judgments in rem and judgments in personam in our law, as regards their effect, appears at bottom to be only a difference of degree." However attractive this doctrine may appear to be, it is, in my opinion, opposed to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, which was not referred to either in this or the earlier decision, and, in my opinion, precludes the reception of the American rule in India. That rule is, in my opinion, in conflict with the provisions of our Statute Law. This is in effect the view taken by Jenkins, O. J., and Mookerjee, J., in Petri Mohan Chahz v. Durlavi Dassya (3).

I would, therefore, answer the question in the affirmative and overrule Srinivasa

Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (1) and Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2).

SPENCER, J.—At the very commencement of the arguments I drew attention to sections 40, 41, 42 and 43 of the Indian Evidence Act which appeared to me to be exhaustive of the question of the relevancy of judgments other than those which operate as a bar to the trial of a suit or issue between the same parties or their privies under the law of res judicata contained in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. These sections of the Evidence Act have not been referred to in the Order of Reference or in the judgments of the two Courts below in dealing with the effect of the judgment in the prior suit (Original Suit No. 274 of 1911).

As regards the decisions in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyangar (1) and Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2) I agree with my Lord in thinking that they went too far in extending the principle of estoppel by judgment beyond the limits of our Codes of Procedure and Evidence; and that they should be overruled as being in contravention of the principles laid down by the Privy Council in Goval Mandar v. Pulmanand Singh (4) for the interpretation of codified law and as being examples of the tendency, since deprecated by their Lordships in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (10), of referring to foreign decisions.

With the exception of the above two decisions of this Court and the case in Boynapalli Venugopala Rao Garu v. Nekhalapudi Venkatarayulu (9), which followed the earlier of them; and the cases in Suppa Bhattar v. Suppu Sokkaya Bhattar (8) and Rahim un-nissa v. Srinivasa Aiyangar (16) which were cases of privity of estate, our attention has not been called to any authoritative ruling of a High Court in this country which would support the return of any other answer but an affirmative one to the question referred to us.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The question raised by the reference is, whether it is open to a party to re assert as against a third person a title which has been definitely negatived in a previous suit against a contesting claimant. The judgment which is pleaded in bar is a judgment in a previous suit filed by the present plaintiff against two other persons for a declaration that he was entitled to the SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA V. AHMED BADSHA FAHIB.

Asari Sheriff and to recover from the Government the emoluments of the office. It was held in that suit that the plaintiff did not prove title to the office and the suit was dismissed. The present suit is filed by the plaintiff against the Government to recover a sum of Rs. 394 alleged to be due to him as the person entitled to the Asari Sheriff and to perform the services connected therewith. The Government was paying the sums to the successful party in the previous litigation and sets up the judgment negating the plaintiff's right as a bar to the suit.

The question is, how far, and under what circumstances, can a judgment in personam be given the force of a judgment in rem or be pleaded as a bar under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, in cases where it is pleaded as a defence to an action by third parties who do not claim under, or were not represented by, the parties to the original action.

So far as the Statute Law in this country is concerned, the case is governed by section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code which deals with res judicata, sections 40 to 44 of the Evidence Act, which deal with the relevancy of judgments of competent Courts, and section 43 of the Specific Relief Act which deals with declaratory decrees.

Under section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code one of the conditions precedent to its application is, that the former suit should be "between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim" and the section is a bar to the trial of a suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit. The section codifies the law in British India as regards the plea of res judicata and, though the principle has been applied to proceedings other than suits, (e.g., execution proceedings), the essentials required by the section as to identity of the questions involved and parties has not been lost sight of. Section 43 of the Specific Relief Act enacts that a declaratory decree passed under the Act is binding only on the parties to the suit, persons claiming through them respectively, and, where any of the parties are trustees, on the persons for whom, if in existence at the date of the declaration, such parties would be trustees. Sections 40 to 44 of the Evidence Act deal with the relevancy of judgments of Courts of Justice. Section 40 enacts that the existence of any judgment, order or decree, which by law prevents any Court from taking cognizance of a suit or holding a trial, is a relevant fact when the question is whether such Court ought to take cognizance of such suit or to hold such trial. Section 41 deals with final judgments, orders or decrees of competent Courts in the exercise of Probate, Matrimonial, Admiralty or Insolvency jurisdiction, or what is known as judgments in rem, and it states that such judgments, orders or decrees are conclusive proof of the matters specified in the section; and, by virtue of section 4 of the Evidence Act, evidence cannot be allowed to disprove the facts established by such judgments. Section 42 refers to judgments relating to matters of a public nature relevant to the enquiry and the section states that such judgments, though evidence, are not conclusive proof of that which they state, thus allowing evidence to be given to disprove the facts found in the judgments. Section 43 says that judgments, orders or decrees, other than those mentioned in sections 40, 41 and 42, are irrelevant, unless the existence of such judgment, order or decree, is a fact in issue, or is relevant under some other provision of the Act, (e.g., section 13). Section 44 enables a party to show that any judgment, order or decree which is relevant under sections 40, 41 or 42, was delivered by a Court not competent to deliver it, or was obtained by fraud or collusion.

In dealing with this question, I think the distinction between the effect of a judgment as preventing the Court from trying the same matter in issue in subsequent proceedings and as simply affording evidence of the truth or falsity of the claim under consideration should be borne in mind. In the former case section 11 declares that the Court shall not try the suit or issue and the plea is one in bar to the maintainability of the action. In cases where there is no bar under section 11, the Court has to try the issue and if the judgment is filed for the purpose of proving the plaintiff's claim or for the purpose of proving the defence to the action, it is relevant only as a piece of evidence, the probative value of which is regulated by the provisions of the Evidence Act. If it is a judgment in rem, the Court, under section 41 of the Evidence Act, will treat it as conclusive proof of the matters stated in that section and under section 4 it will prevent evidence from being given for the purpose of disproving the facts established by the judgment in rem. One has only to file the judgment and the Court has no option but to decide the matter covered by it in accordance with the declaration in that judgment, even though the other party may be in a position to prove facts to the contrary. So far as judgments in rem are concerned, I think the matter is codified by section 41 of the Evidence Act which states what judgments would be judgments in rem so as to make them conclusive proof of the declarations granted by them. It seems to me that it is not open to us, in the face of the sections of the Civil Procedure Code, the Evidence Act and the Specific Relief Act, to hold that judgments not falling within those sections would still be a bar to an action or afford conclusive proof. This, in effect, would be to create new kinds of res judicata and to destroy the distinction between judgments in rem and judgments in personam which has been laid down in sections 41 and 42 of the Evidence Act.

In Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2) it was held that the provisions of section 13 of the Code of 1832 were not exhaustive, and a judgment was held to be binding on a person who was no party to it on the ground that third parties having no interest in the property at the time of the litigation cannot, in the absence of any fraud or collusion, question the validity of a judgment passed in a suit between the only parties interested in the property at the date of the previous suit. Reference was made to Bigelow on Estoppel, 5th Edition, page 44, where the learned author observes: "If all who have a right to appear and be heard in a cause have been duly made parties, the judgment establishes a perfect and complete right against all, as much as would a conveyance of a joint estate by all the parties interested. Judgment in an action strictly in personam, indeed, binds third persons in that way; all that is necessary is that all those who have the exclusive right to litigate the cause are proper parties to it, and that the question should be determined without collusion. ... Indeed, the difference between judgments in rem and judgments in personam in our law, as regards their effect, appears at bottom to be only a difference of degree." When a judgment is in personam I can find no authority either in English decisions or recognised works by English jurists for holding that it can prevent persons, not parties or privies, from agitating the question except in cases of joint liability and covenants for indemnity. In Natal Land & Colonization Co. v. Good (17), it was sought to use a judgment between the mortgagor and the person from whom he purchased the property which found that the sale was vitiated by fraud against a mortgagee who was no party to the suit. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed: "Now, the first observation which occurs is, that this judgment was not admissible in evidence. It is the only proof of the fraud; but if it were ample and sufficient proof of the fraud, it is res inter alios acta, and in no Court of Law or Equity in this country would it have been admitted at all, except as between the parties to it, the respondents and Crowley, or if a foundation for it had been laid by evidence of some fraud having been committed by which the plaintiffs could be affected." In Anderson v. Collinson (18), it was held that a judgment in affiliation proceedings taken by the daughter of the plaintiff holding that it was not proved that the defendant was the father, was not final and conclusive in an action for seduction filed by the mother so as to estop the defendant from denying that he was the father of the child, as the parties to the two proceedings were different. In Spencer v. Williams (19), Lord Penzance observed: "It is proper, therefore, where the question is raised between the same parties, or those claiming under them, that they should be estopped; but the decisions give no authority for a proposition of a wider character—that a party who was not a party in the original litigation shall be bound by the result." The rule was held to apply, though the interest of the parties was identical and the same question was involved, namely, whether a person was next-of-kin and entitled to distribution of assets of the deceased. In Wenman v. Mackenzie (20), the plaintiff sued for injury to her reversionary right alleging that she was entitled to a fishery in an arm of the sea and was in possession through her tenant, Fairman, and that the defendant who held the neighbouring property under one Gipps infringed her right. Fairman, her tenant, had filed an action to recover damages for a similar injury against Gipps and the suit was referred to arbitration, and an award made in favour of Fairman. It was held that the proceedings were not evidence as plaintiff "did not claim by, through or under Fairman and, so far as she was concerned, the action of Fairman v. Gipps was res inter alios acta" and as the proceedings and award could not have been admitted as evidence against her, they are not admissible for her. In Petrie v. Nuttall (21), it was held that the conviction of a person for barring a highway would not bar a suit by the same person against another for stopping up the road on the ground that the Crown and subject were the parties to the indictment and, therefore, it was not between the two parties to the action and that the judgment in the indictment may be given as evidence upon the trial of the issue as to whether the locus in quo is a public highway; though it cannot be pleaded as an estoppel.

Estoppel must be mutual and it is difficult to see how a party not bound by a judgment can set it up in bar against a party to it.

Turning to the question as to whether a judgment in personam can acquire the force of a judgment in rem under any given set of facts, the only authority which I can find for such a view is the passage from Bigelow already referred to and the decision of Oandee v. Lord (22), referred to in Srinivasa Aiyanger v. Arayar Srinivasa Aiyanger (1), as authority for the view taken in that case.

With all respect it seems to me that we cannot travel outside the provision of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure and apply the rule of res judicata to cases falling outside the limitation imposed by the section. In Gokul Mandar v. Lendmanund Singh (4), their Lordships of the Privy Council observe: "They will further observe that the essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law, and it is not the province of a Judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction." In Peari Mohan Shaha v. Durlavi Dassya (3), the question arose in a suit between an auction purchaser who bought the right of one Durlavi Dassya, and her daughter Patteswari, whose suit under section 223 of the Code (relating to suits by an unsuccessful claimant) was dismissed. The suit was filed by the purchaser against the unsuccessful claimant for a declaration of her title and the decree in the previous suit was sought to be availed of as concluding the matter in issue. Jenkins, C. J., and Mookerjee, J., were of opinion that the provisions as to res judicata contained in section 11 of the Code were exhaustive and that judgments in suits between third parties, however cogent they might be as evidence where the same matter is in question in a suit by or against a stranger, did not operate as a bar to the suit under section 11 of the Code. Jenkins, C. J., observed: "It appears to me that in these circumstances, and having regard to the facts with which we have to deal in this case, the result of that litigation is at least as cogent against the defendant as would have been an instrument of transfer executed by Patteswari, the ostensible owner, in favour of her sons. I wish to make it clear that, in the view I take, I cannot regard the decree in the previous litigation as amounting to res judicata which would bar all possibility of evidence on the part of the defendant. It would, I conceive, have been open to the defendant to show that, notwithstanding that decree, there were circumstances either vitiating the result of that litigation or affecting its result so as to prevent its operation in favour of Patteswari's sons." The learned Judges were not prepared to follow the dictum in Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2) that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code were not exhaustive and judgment not inter partes can make the question res judicata. This decision was referred to and followed by the Chief Justice and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Second Appeal No. 1747 of 1919. The learned Judges were of opinion that the provisions of the Code as to res judicata were exhaustive and that a judgment not between the same parties or their privies was only evidence of title. They were not prepared to follow Sayam Ramamurthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2) and Suppa Bhattar v. Suppu Sokkaya Bhattar (8) on the ground that the attention of the learned Judges was not drawn to the decision of the Privy Council in Goku! Mandar v. Pulmarund Singh (4). In Ramnad Zemindar v. Dorasami (23) which related to a monthly allowance, it was held that a litigation as regards the right to receive the allowance would not estop the Zemindar from putting the party claiming it against him to the proof of his title on the ground that he was not a party to the previous litigation. So far, therefore, as the Civil Procedure Code is concerned, I do not think that the trial of a suit or issue can be barred because of an adjudication in a prior suit or proceeding to which the plaintiff was not a party or privy.

Turning to the Evidence Act, I have already pointed out that sections 41 and 42 draw a distinction between judgments in rem and judgments in personam and it seems to me to be clear from the sections that a judgment which does not fall within section 41 can only be evidence but cannot be used for the purpose of preventing the other side from proving facts which he sets up.

It is not open to us to import considerations as to convenience in dealing with matters which have been codified and dealt with by Evidence Act, however attractive the theory may be, and however much one would like to have the principle embodied by the Legislature in the Codes. It is no doubt true that there are decisions of this Court which adopt the view of Bigelow as to judgments in personam creating an estoppel as against strangers. [See Srinavasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinavasa Aiyangar (1), Sayan Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2), Suppa Bhattar v. Suppu Sokkaya Bhattar (8) and Boyinapalli Venugopala Rao Garu v. Nekkalapudi Venkatrayudu (9).] In the last of these cases it was held that a decision between the plaintiff and another person that the latter is a co-proprietor with him is conclusive on third parties where the contention raised by them depends on the relationship between the plaintiff and such person, and the learned Judges followed Srinavasa Aiyangar v. Arayar Srinavasa Aiyangar (1) but they, however, observed that the rule that makes the decision conclusive on third parties was not the rule of res judicata and they based their decision on the ground that it would be intolerable to hold that, when the relationship between the two parties have been determined by litigation between them, other persons can contend that one of them has not the right against the other which he has been held to have.

With all respect, it seems to me that these decisions do not take into consideration the effect of the provisions of the Evidence Act and the limitations imposed by a consideration of those sections. To hold that a judgment which does not fall under section 41 is conclusive proof would be to act in direct contravention of the provisions of section 42 which declares that judgments, orders or decrees, other than those mentioned in section 41, are relevant but not conclusive proof.

It seems to me that where a judgment in personam is pleaded, its legal effect and probative force will depend upon the facts of each case. As pointed out by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case I have referred to, the judgment of a competent Court whereby a declaration is made as regards property in dispute, would have the force of a conveyance by the other parties to the suit in favour of the successful litigant. Where, therefore, all the parties interested in the immovable property or in the right in contest have been parties to the previous litigation it may be that the judgment obtained in the previous litigation would render it impossible for persons to get rid of the effect of the judgment. But this is not because the judgment constitutes res judicata or judgment in rem. The difficulty would be analogous to the difficulty of a person who wants to impeach the title which is conferred on his opponent by all the persons who could have a legal interest in the property with the additional fact that when a judgment is relevant it is not open to a party to show that as between the parties the conclusion arrived at by the Judge is wrong and is not warranted by the evidence. The decision in Suppa Bhattar v. Suppu Sokkaya Bhattar (8) may be supported on the ground that all the parties interested were parties to the previous litigation in favour of one of them. Cases where jus tertii is set up are really no exceptions to the rule. In all cases of jus tertii the person who sets up the rights of a third party is bound to prove that the third party has or had the rights alleged and it is always open to the other party to displace the title of the person so set up by showing that he was a party to the litigation which has negatived that title. Whatever would estop or bar the persons whose title is set up must also bar the person pleading jus tertii whether the estoppel is by record, deed or in pais. This is the principle on which Rees v. Hebdon (15) referred to by my Lord was decided. The defendant relied on his right to the office of bailiff owing to his having been elected by two former bailiffs. A judgment was produced in which the right of the persons whom he set up was negatived and it was held that having made the title of the previous bailiffs part of his right, there could be no better evidence in disproof other than the judgment where their rights were negatived.

(23) 7 M. 341; 8 Ind. Jur. 188; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 821.

WILAYAT HUSAIN v. PUTTU LAL.

I would hold that the decision in the previous suit is not conclusive but is only evidence and that it is open to the plaintiff to establish his title as against the Government and I would answer the question raised by the reference in the affirmative.

The case coming on for final hearing, after the expression of the above opinion by the Full Bench, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J. and KRISHNAN, J.—We are unable to agree with the Subordinate Judge that, assuming the office to be hereditary, the plaintiff has proved that he is the lawful successor by hereditary right. As the office cannot be enjoyed by several heirs in common, it follows, in our opinion, that succession must be by primogeniture, and, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, we think that the succession must be by lineal primogeniture, that is, by descent to the eldest son and his son and that a grandson who is the son of an eldest son of the last office-holder is entitled to succeed in preference to a junior son, where the eldest son has predeceased his father, or is incapable of succeeding owing to insanity or any similar reason. The appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Presumption of benefit.

In the case of a business undertaking managed by a father on behalf of his minor son, where transactions are carried out in the ordinary course of business, it is not necessary for a creditor to give specific evidence of benefit in each individual transaction, and the fact that the transactions were carried out in the ordinary course of business is sufficient to raise a presumption that they were for the benefit of the business.

Revision against a decree of the Judge Small Cause Court, Lucknow, dated 19th July 1921.

Mr. Ghulan Hasam, for the Applicant.

Mr. Bishambhar Nath Khanna, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order of the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court. The suit was one for the price of cloth purchased on the defendant's behalf by his father and certificated guardian, Mumtaz Husain. The learned Judge has found on evidence which I find to be sufficient, though the applicant attempts to challenge it, that the shop was originally carried on in partnership by the applicant and his two elder brothers. The applicant was at that time a minor. His two elder brothers successively died and at the time when the cloth was purchased the applicant alone remained and had become the sole owner of the shop. Even in the application made by the father to be appointed his guardian it had been stated that the shop belonged to the sons and that it was for the purpose of carrying on this shop that the application was made. It has been contended that there is no proof that the purchase of this cloth was for the benefit of the defendant. It appears to me that in the case of a business undertaking where transactions are carried out in the ordinary course of business it is not necessary for the creditor to give specific evidence of benefit in each individual transaction. The fact that the transactions were carried out in the ordinary course of business is sufficient to raise a presumption that they were for the benefit of the business. This has been held in the case of a Hindu joint family trading partnership in Baba Din v. Bansraj (1). Even if evidence were necessary the defendant has himself stated in his evidence that he always believed that whatever the father did in connection with the business was done for his benefit. I find no reason for interfering with the decree of the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court and I accordingly reject the application with costs.

In an action for an injunction and damages for an infringement of plaintiffs' copyright, if it be found that even inaccuracies in both the works are identical, that references of significance in plaintiffs' work are reproduced in defendants' work but, by reason of absence of other matter, have no significance therein and there is identity not merely of information but of language, that leaves no doubt that the work of the defendants is a copy of the plaintiffs' in a very high degree, [p. 984, col. 2.]

In such a case a plaintiff would be entitled to the amount of the proceeds of the sales of the offending work and to general damages for infringement of copyright, probable loss of trade, advertisements, etc. [p. 985, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Additional Judge, Lahore, dated the 10th November 1916.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. O. Bewan Petman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an action by the plaintiff-firm, of Calcutta, against the defendant-firm, of Lahore, for an injunction and for damages on the ground that the defendants' publication "Khosla's Directory" constituted an infringement of the plaintiffs' copyright in their work "Thacker's Indian Directory".

The Court below found that piracy by the defendants was established and granted a decree restraining defendants from publishing their book and decreeing Rs. 3,000 damages to plaintiffs.

The defendants appeal to this Court, and though their first ground of attack was a denial of the plaintiffs' copyright in "Thacker's Indian Directory", that ground has been expressly withdrawn before us.

Next, it was argued that the Trial Court had no jurisdiction, inasmuch as under Act III of 1914, The Indian Copyright Act, all suits under the Act must be instituted either in the High Court or in the District Judge's Court, that the case was transferred by the District Judge on the 22nd June 1914 to the Court of Mr. Forbes, Additional District Judge, and, therefore, not Additional Judge, but Mr. Forbes who was transferred before the completion of the trial had jurisdiction to try the suit.

KHOSLA BROTHERS OF LAHORE & TRACKER'S DIRECTORIES LTD. OF CALCUTTA.

This objection we have no hesitation in overruling, for the transfer was clearly to the Court of the Additional District Judge and as that is a permanent Court, Mr. Forbes' successors had jurisdiction to try the case precisely in the same degree as he had.

A further objection was raised that one of defendants' witnesses, Brij Lal, had not been summoned, and the Trial Court should have given wider opportunity for calling him, but on examination of the record, we find that for over a year the defendants failed to get this witness served and received from the Court below all the latitude to which they were entitled. In any case this witness was not intended to prove more than the plaintiffs were prepared to admit.

On the main question in the case, whether in fact there has been piracy, we agree entirely with the Court below.

The plaintiffs allege that a very substantial portion of defendants' publication is a word for word copy of their Directory; that even plaintiffs' mistakes have been reproduced by defendants, and that defendants' method of compilation consisted, when it did not consist of mere copying of the plaintiffs' work, of the despatch to persons concerned with a request for corrections, if any, of slips cut out of the plaintiffs' work.

In proof of these allegations, we have seen a large number of instances, in which the inaccuracies in both works are identical, others in which references, of significance in plaintiffs' work, are reproduced in defendants but, by reason of the absence of other matter, have no significance therein.

We have found passim an identity not merely of information but of language that leaves no doubt that defendants' work was a copy of the plaintiffs' in a very high degree [cf. Kelly v. Morris (1), Morris v. Ashbee (2)].

Finally, the oral evidence is unimpeachable that where defendants did make inquiry, their inquiry was limited to a mere correction and verification of the material collected by the plaintiffs.

With regard to the relief granted it is objected that the plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction as they knew by 1910 that the defendants were pirating their work and took no action till 1914. Having regard to the fact that the plaintiffs are a Limited Company of Calcutta whilst defendants reside in Lahore and that plaintiffs had to collect evidence, we do not think plaintiffs were unduly slow in asking for relief, in any case, the Directory in suit is that for 1913 whilst the suit was instituted in June 1914.

The last objection is, that the Court below has fixed the amount of damages arbitrarily, that plaintiffs have proved no loss and did not press their prayer for an account of the sales by Khosla.

In cases such as these the plaintiffs are at liberty to claim general damages and also compensation for conversion, and although it was desirable that plaintiffs should have pressed their inquiry into the sales by Khosla, we see no reason to doubt that the damages awarded are very moderate indeed, in view of the importance of the work pirated and the gross nature of the piracy.

In Exchange Telegraph Company v. Gregory & Co. (3) it was held that where damages are not accurately calculable, they are damages at large.

In Byrne v. Statist Company (4) the plaintiffs did not press for an account and the Judge assessed the damages on general considerations. Section 7 of Act III of 1914 defines the right of the owner of the copyright to take proceedings in respect of the conversion of infringing copies, but this relief has not been sought in this case, and the prayer for the equitable remedy of an account of profits has not been pressed, so that the damages awardable in this case are merely those for infringement of the copyright and infringement by sale of copies, the plaintiffs cannot have both an inquiry into damages and an account of profits: De Vries v. Ellis (5).

In Muddock v. Blakewood (6) it was held that the amount due as damages was the actual amount of the proceeds of the copies sold.

RABINDRA CHANDRA CHATTERJEE, In re.

Applying these principles to the facts of this case, the plaintiffs appear to be entitled to the amount of the proceeds of the sales of the offending work and to general damages for infringement of copyright, probable loss of trade, advertisements, etc., and there can be little doubt that the sale proceeds alone of Khosla's Directory far exceeded Rs. 3,000 (£200).

For these reasons we decline to interfere and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 14, interpretation of—Jurisdiction to entertain proceedings against legal practitioner—Enquiry before institution of proceedings—Formulation of charge.

Section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act empowers any Court in which a Pleader practises to consider a charge of misconduct made against him in such Court, and the section does not limit the consideration of the charge to the Court in which the misconduct is alleged to have been committed. Proceeding under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act taken by the District Judge, Dacca, against Rabindra Chandra Chatterji, a Pleader, practising in the District Court at Dacca.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dusarathi Sanyal (with him Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Bepin Chandra Basu), for the Petitioner.—The petitioner before your Lordships is a junior Pleader of the Dacca Bar. He filed a plaint in the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge with insufficient stamp. When the mistake was pointed out to him, he submitted that as the Collectorate had closed he could not get the requisite stamp and prayed for one day's time. This the learned Subordinate Judge rejected. He then prayed that the stamp of small denomination might be accepted or that cash might be accepted—all these prayers were rejected. The learned Subordinate Judge then asked the petitioner to leave the Court and then asked the Pleaders present to ask the petitioner to go out. Then the learned Judge called his Chaprasi. The petitioner complained against the conduct of the Judge to the Bar Association which passed a resolution asking members not to appear before the said Judge. Sometime later the petitioner instituted a criminal case against the said Judge. I beg to submit that the institution of a criminal case cannot be a ground for proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act. Every citizen has the right to institute criminal case against any one, rightly or wrongly. If the complaint is false, the accused can get damages, but that cannot be a ground for proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act.

[SALDERSON, C. J.—There has yet been no enquiry by the District Judge. How can we say that there is no ground for such proceedings?]

Had the learned District Judge jurisdiction to start proceedings as he did? The incident took place before the Subordinate Judge in another Court. The District Judge had no cognizance in the matter. He should not have proceeded on newspaper reports and confidential Police report. Reads section 14, Legal Practitioners Act. I submit there were no proper materials before the District Judge to start proceedings against the petitioner. There was no legal foundation for the proceedings. Refers to Nabin Chandra Das Gupta, In re (1).

The case should, at any rate, be transferred to another Judge. His explanation has aggravated our apprehension of not getting justice at his hands.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—The District Judge cannot decide the matter. He can only hold the enquiry.]

The conduct of the District Judge has given rise to serious apprehension and in the interest of justice the case should be transferred to the Additional District Judge.

Mr. B. L. Mitter, Standing Counsel (with Babu Surendra Nath Guha), appeared for Government and submitted that all incidents did not take place in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and that apart from Police report it cannot be denied that there were Bar Association Meetings and dissuasion of Pleaders from attending their proper work. On these materials the Judge can certainly take cognisance of the matter.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal replied.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, O. J.—This was a Rule granted by my learned brothers, Mr. Justice Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Pearson, calling upon the District Judge of Dacca to show cause why the proceedings under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act against the petitioner should not be quashed or, in the alternative, why the proceedings should not be transferred to some other Court or why such other order should not be passed as to this Court might seem proper. The Court made an order that, in the meantime, pending the hearing of the Rule, further proceedings under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act should be stayed. It appears that the learned District Judge of Dacca caused a notice to be served upon the petitioner under section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. That notice referred to certain matters, which, I think, may be classed under three heads: With regard to the first, the allegation was that the petitioner, being a Pleader of the Court, was, on the 15th of June 1921, "guilty of grossly improper conduct" in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Babu Pashupati Basu, in that he addressed the Subordinate Judge in an offensive manner and repeatedly refused to submit to his order in regard to the admission of a plaint that was insufficiently stamped and, after the Subordinate Judge had passed his order, repeatedly interrupted him in a grossly improper and discourteous manner. The second matter, that was alleged, was that after this incident the petitioner caused a meeting to be called of the members of the Bar Association, Dacca, and, that by the statements he made regarding the Subordinate Judge, Babu Pashupati Basu, induced certain Pleaders of that Court to abstain from appearing in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on behalf of their clients in cases in which they had been engaged. Then the notice went on to allege that, in consequence of such inducement, certain Pleaders wilfully and without excuse and in contravention of their agreements with the persons who had engaged them to appear on their behalf in the Court of the Subordinate Judge refused to appear in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and thus deprived their clients of the legal assistance they had agreed to render them, and the third matter to which reference was made was that it was alleged that the petitioner had filed a complaint in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate, Babu B. M. Ghose, against the Subordinate Judge, Babu Pashupati Basu, charging him with having, while in the discharge of his duties as Judge, committed certain criminal offenses; and by reason of these matters it was alleged that the learned Pleader was guilty of grossly improper conduct and had rendered himself liable to be suspended or dismissed under section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The first point on which the learned Pleader in support of the Rule has relied, is that the learned District Judge who directed the service of this notice had no jurisdiction to institute these proceedings by reason of the fact that the misconduct relied upon did not take place in the learned District Judge's Court. There seem to me to be more than one answer to this argument. In the first place, the alleged misconduct on which the notice was based did not take place altogether in the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge. It is true that the matters referred to under the first head, which I have mentioned, took place in the learned Subordinate Judge's Court; but the matters which are referred to under heads 2 and 3 namely, the alleged inducement to abstain from appearing in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and the alleged complaint in respect of criminal offence did not take place in the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge. Consequently, it cannot be said that the whole of the alleged misconduct, upon which the notice was based, had taken place in the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge.

(1) 35 C. 317; 12 C. W. N. 381; 7 Cr. L. J. 252.

Apart from that, in my judgment, the learned District Judge had jurisdiction to deal with all the matters which were alleged in the notice, inasmuch as the petitioner (the learned Pleader) was practising in the Court of the learned District Judge and it was within his jurisdiction, upon proper materials being laid before him, to institute the proceedings in the manner in which he did.

The second point on which the learned Vakil relied was that the learned Judge had acted upon materials which were not sufficient and in a sense improper in that he had stated that he had acquired some of the information upon which he relied from newspaper reports. It is clear from the learned Judge's answer to the petition that the only matters on which information from newspaper reports was attained, were, first, the proceedings at the meeting of the Bar Association and, secondly, the institution of a criminal case against the learned Subordinate Judge. As regards those two matters there is no dispute that there was a complaint in criminal proceedings laid, and there is also no dispute that a Resolution was passed by the members of the association to carry out a certain course of conduct. The learned Judge has informed the Court of the materials which he had with regard to the other matters and as to how he obtained those materials, and, in my judgment, this second point affords no reason for making the Rule absolute.

The third point which the learned Vakil urged was that this case ought to be transferred from the file of the learned District Judge to the file of the learned Additional District Judge. In this case the petitioner, (the learned Pleader), has set out in his petition his reasons why the case should be transferred from the learned District Judge's file. In my judgment, the allegations which have been made have been completely answered by the explanation which the learned District Judge has given and I can see no reason for any reasonable apprehension on the part of the petitioner that he will not get a fair and impartial hearing at the hands of the learned District Judge. In my judgment this Rule should be discharged.

In discharging the Rule, I am expressing no opinion as to the merits of the matter. My judgment is confined to holding that it is not possible at this stage of the proceedings to say that none of the allegations, if proved, would amount to professional misconduct within the meaning of the Act.

WOODROFFS, J.—I agree. As stated in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, the only matter before us now is whether the proceedings should be quashed or transferred: and, with no other question we are now concerned. It may be that the facts charged did not happen or, if they did, those facts were insufficient for proceeding against the applicant. On this I say nothing now. If it were shown that the facts charged, if proved, did not constitute grounds for proceeding under the Act, then there would be a case for quashing the proceedings as asked; but in this case there is at least one charge, namely, as regards "the addressing of the Subordinate Judge in an offensive manner" and "repeatedly interrupting him in a grossly improper and discourteous manner" as to which, whatever may be said as regards the other charges, it is not possible to say that it may not in any case be a ground for proceeding under the Act. Therefore, it seems to me that the proceedings cannot now be quashed and that the facts must be enquired into. No doubt, as it was contended by the learned Vakil for the applicant, there must be a foundation for these proceedings as for any other; but I am unable to say that there was no ground for such proceedings because details of the information which include a report submitted by the learned Subordinate Judge himself, and other reports said to have been received, have not been set out in detail. Moreover, although there may be difference as to what actually occurred in the case of some of the facts, many others appear to be well enough known.

RABINDRA CHANDRA GUPTA, In re.

On the question of jurisdiction, it is said that section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act says "charged in such Court." It does not say that the charge must be made only by that Court in which the alleged misconduct has taken place. Therefore, it does not by these wordings limit the charge to the Court in which the alleged misconduct took place. Moreover, as already pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, the charge includes matters which are said to have occurred subsequent to the proceedings in the Court of Babu Pashupati Basu which are the subject of the first charge. It has been further held in the case of Babu Het Ram, In the matter of (2) that section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act empowers any Court in which a Pleader practices to consider a charge of misconduct made against him in such Court and that the section does not limit the consideration of a charge to the Court in which the misconduct is alleged to have been committed. I see no reason for dissenting from the opinion there expressed.

On the last point, namely, that of transfer, the grounds upon which it has been urged, have been met in the explanation of the District Judge. I do not think that the applicant has established a case for the grant of the transfer asked for.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree that this Rule cannot be supported in either of its two branches.

As regards the first alternative, the contention of the petitioner that the proceedings should be quashed is based upon a two-fold ground. It is argued, in the first place, that the proceedings initiated by the District Judge are without jurisdiction, as the alleged incident did not take place in his Court. This position is, in my opinion, founded upon a construction of section 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act which is not borne out by its language. Section 12 authorises the suspension and dismissal of Pleaders and Mukhtears convicted of criminal offences by the High Court. Section 13 then provides for the suspension and dismissal of Pleaders and Mukhtears guilty of unprofessional conduct even though the particular act of misconduct has not led to conviction by a Court of Justice. Section 14, thereupon, provides that "If any such Pleader or Mukhtear" (that is a Pleader or Mukhtear holding a certificate as mentioned in section 13) "practising in any subordinate Court or in any Revenue office is charged in such Court or office with taking instructions except as aforesaid (i.e., as mentioned in section 13) or with any such misconduct as aforesaid" (i.e., as specified in section 13) "the presiding officer shall send him a copy of the charge and also a notice that, on a day to be therein appointed, such charge will be taken into consideration." This section plainly authorises a subordinate Court to institute proceedings against a Pleader or Mukhtear practising in that Court. It is not restricted to cases where the alleged misconduct has been committed in the Court wherein the proceedings are instituted. This was the interpretation adopted in the case of Babu Het Ram, In the matter of (2) and no good reason has been assigned why we should place a narrow construction upon the section.

The second ground which forms the basis of the contention that the proceedings should be quashed is that they have no legal foundation. There is, in my opinion, no substance whatever in this argument. Our attention has been invited to the case of Nabin Chandra Das Gupta, In re (1) where proceedings instituted under section 14 were quashed on the ground that if what was alleged against the legal practitioner, namely, refusal to accept engagement, was established, it would not constitute a ground for a disciplinary order under section 13. In the case before us, such a position cannot be maintained. It cannot be disputed that some at any rate of the allegations against the legal practitioner may, if established, constitute grounds for a disciplinary order under section 13. It cannot consequently be maintained that there is no legal foundation for these proceedings.

It has been urged, however, that the proceedings have been instituted on materials which cannot be treated as affording a legal foundation for the initiation of an enquiry under section 13. The contention is that as the District Judge has taken action on the basis of a confidential report by the Subordinate Judge, on another confidential report by the Additional Superintendent of Police, on reports in a newspaper as to the proceedings at a meeting of the Bar Association, on the fact of institution of a criminal case by the Pleader, and on certain information furnished by the ministerial officers of the Court, the proceedings must be deemed to be without legal foundation. I am not prepared to accept this contention as well founded. Section 14 does not specify the nature of the materials upon which the Court concerned may take action. It is plain, however, that if proceedings are instituted, there must be an enquiry supported by legal evidence. That this is the correct view of the scope of section 14, is clear from the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Sathekal Krishna Rao, In the matter of (3), where Sir J. Hannen made the following observation: "It does not appear very clearly what led to the institution of those proceedings, but it is necessary to inquire into their origin, as if it became known to an officer presiding in a subordinate Court that one of the practitioners before that Court has been guilty of unprofessional conduct, it would be within the scope of his duties to take steps for the purpose of having that matter adjudicated upon." This is identical with the opinion expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Randall v. Brigham (4) where Field, J., observed as follows: "It is not necessary that proceedings against attorneys for malpractice, or any unprofessional conduct, should be founded upon formal allegations against them. Such proceedings are often instituted upon information developed in the progress of a cause; or from what the Court learns of the conduct of the attorney from his own observation. Sometimes they are moved by third parties upon affidavit; and sometimes they are taken by the Court upon its own motion. All that is requisite to their validity is that, when not taken for matters occurring in open Court, in the presence of the Judges, notice should be given to the attorney, of the charges made, and opportunity afforded him for explanation and defence. The manner in which the proceedings shall be conducted, so that it be without oppression or unfairness, is a matter of judicial regulation. The authority of the Court over its attorneys and counsellors is of the highest importance. They constitute a profession essential to society. Their aid is required, not merely to represent suitors before the Courts, but in the more difficult transactions of private life. The highest interests are placed in their hands and confided to their management. The confidence which they receive and the responsibilities which they are obliged to assume, demand not only ability of a high order, but the strictest integrity. The authority which the Courts hold over them, and the qualifications required for their admission, are intended to secure those qualities." This view has been followed in practice in many cases reported in the books; amongst them two may be mentioned here: Advocate, In the matter of an (5) and Advocate, In the matter of (6). In the first case, action was taken on the basis of an information communicated to this Court by the Advocate-General in a letter addressed by him. In the second case, action was taken by this Court on the basis of a casual statement in the deposition of a witness in a proceeding in a subordinate Court. What is essential, however, is that the charge must be formulated with precision so as to enable the legal practitioner concerned to meet the allegations against him, Ganapathi Sastry, In re (7). In the present case, the petitioner has not contended that the allegations contained in the charge are vague and indefinite. On the other hand, the eighteen paragraphs of his written statement give a very full and complete account of his version of the case. Indeed, up to the present moment there is nothing to show that the petitioner has been in any way embarrassed by vagueness or indefiniteness in the charge against him. On these grounds, I hold that the first alternative branch of the Rule cannot be supported.

As regards the second alternative, it has been contended that there is a reasonable apprehension of miscarriage of justice in the mind of the petitioner. I am not able to adopt this view and I cannot overlook that the ultimate order, if any, can be passed by this Court and this Court alone on the materials supplied by the subordinate Court.

I hold accordingly that the Rule must be discharged;

Plaintiff purchased the shamilat appertaining to a certain khata in 1879. In 1895 the shamilat of the village was divided into three plots, and one of these was partitioned, the remaining two being kept undivided. Plaintiff put forward a claim to a share in the plot which was partitioned but his claim was denied and he received no share out of that plot. He, nevertheless, continued in joint possession of the undivided plots of shamilat land and his enjoyment thereof was in no way interfered with. In 1914 fresh partition proceedings were started in respect of these plots, and plaintiff's right to a share in the shamilat was again denied. He now brought a suit for a declaration of his title:

Held, that, although the denial of his title by the defendants in 1895 gave the plaintiff a cause of action, he was not bound to sue for a declaration of his title, inasmuch as he continued in joint possession of the undivided plots of the shamilat land and that the defendants' denial of his title in 1914 gave him a fresh cause of action and his suit was, therefore, within limitation. JUDGMENT.—In the suit out of which the present second appeal arises the plaintiff-respondent sued for a declaration that he was the owner of a share in the shamilat appertaining to khata No. 75 in village Hadali. He alleged that he purchased the shamilat of this khata from one Tahir on 17th February 1879. In 1885 the same shamilat was sold by Tahir to defendant No. 2, appellant, who pleaded that the plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation. The Trial Court dismissed the suit on two grounds:—(1) that the shamilat in question was not sold to the plaintiff by Tahir in 1879, and (2) that the suit was barred by time, as plaintiff's title was denied in the course of partition proceedings in 1895. The lower Appellate Court, however, held (1) that the sale to the plaintiff in 1879 included the land in dispute, and (2) that the suit was not barred by time, because only a part of the shamilat was divided in 1895, and thereafter the plaintiff remained in joint possession of the village shamilat, of which the land in dispute is a part. It, therefore, decreed the claim and Muhammad Hanif, defendant, has filed a second appeal to this Court.

It is not now contended that the plaintiff did not buy the shamilat appertaining to khata No. 75 in 1879, but it is again urged that the present suit is barred by time. A copy of an entry in the wajib ul-ars, prepared in the Settlement of 1891, shows that the shamilat of village Hadali was divided into three plots jim, sin and toe and that the village proprietors agreed that only toe should be divided, plots jim and sin being retained undivided as grazing ground. In 1895, there was a partition of plot toe and the plaintiff put forward his claim to a share in it by virtue of the sale in his favour of 1879. But on the 18th September 1895 the Revenue

PRAKASH CHANDRA SARKAR V. BRINDABAN CHANDRA SARKAR.

Officer held that he was not a co-sharer in the shamilat appertaining to khata No. 75 and he was, therefore, not allotted any share therein. His share in that plot was 8 bighas 4 kanals in area and it went to Muhammad Hanif and thereafter the plaintiff took no steps to establish his title. In 1914 fresh proceedings for partition of plots jim and sin took place and the plaintiff again put forward his claim to a share in them, and because the Revenue Officer rejected his application for a share, he brought the present suit to establish his title. It is admitted that the plaintiff is a co-sharer in the shamilat independently of his claim to a share by reason of the sale to him in 1879. It is also admitted that he has all along been in joint possession with other co-sharers of plots jim and sin and is enjoying grazing rights therein. Counsel for the appellant cites Ahmad v. Karmdad (1), Kalu v. Ram Lal (2) and Ghulam Hussain v. Saifullah Khan (3) as authorities for the contention that the present suit is barred by time. Those authorities are, in our opinion, all of them distinguishable from the present case, because in those cases there was only one invasion of the plaintiff's rights and he had to bring a suit for a declaration within six years of that invasion. In Hakim Singh v. Waryaman (4) it was held that a suit for a declaration of his title to immoveable property by a person in possession as proprietor is not barred if brought within six years from the time when the defendant attempts to oust him from the land, although a right to sue the defendant who had been recorded as owner of the property in the Settlement Record had already accrued and become barred. No doubt the defendant's denial of his title in 1895 gave the plaintiff a cause of action to sue for a declaration, but he remained in joint possession of the undivided plots of shamilat land and his enjoyment thereof was in no way interfered with, and it was, therefore, unnecessary for him to bring a suit to establish his title. He could well afford to wait until an attempt was made to deprive him of his share in those plots. We note also that the entries in the Revenue Records have all along been in his favour.

It was pointed out in Hakim Singh v. Waryaman (1) (see page 672 of the record) that a man is not bound to bring a declaratory suit on any and every possible invasion of his title, and such suits are not encouraged by the Court unless they are clearly necessary. When the fresh proceedings for partition began in 1914, and the defendant denied plaintiff's title to a share in the shamilat appertaining to khata No. 75 in plots jim and sin of the shamilat, there was a fresh invasion of the plaintiff's title, which, in our opinion, gave him a fresh cause of action. The reason why he brought no suit at the time of the partition proceedings of 1895 was, doubtless, that the area then involved was very small. But now that the defendant's action threatens to deprive him of his share in the rest of the shamilat, he is entitled, upon the fresh cause of action to bring a suit for a declaration.

In our opinion, the decision of the lower Appellate Court is right and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

and the Court made the desired order. Objection to the order was taken by the judgment-debtor before the Execution Court. The matter went up in appeal to High Court which declared that the transfer must be treated as a transfer of the whole decree and that no sum should be paid out of Court to A. except on his giving security to refund the same if required. Some time after this A. started a fresh execution in which B, one of the remaining decree-holders, applied to be added as a party. This was allowed. A revision application against the order was dismissed by the High Court, and leave was sought by A. to appeal to the Privy Council:

Held, that there were no grounds for allowing the application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. [p. 993, col. 2; p. 995, col. 2.]

Per Miller, C. J.—(1) that the order sought to be appealed against was not a final order determining the rights of the parties in any matter in controversy in the suit as the rights of the decree-holders as to their shares to claim the benefit of the decree were settled by the decree itself and were further determined by the High Court judgment which declared that the transfer of part of the decree must be treated as a transfer of the whole, that the order related to procedure and was merely a natural corollary of the High Court judgment; [p. 993, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that in view of the clear provisions of O. XXI, r. 15 empowering a Court in such a case to protect the interests of all the joint decree-holders, there was no substantial question of law involved. [p. 993, col. 2.]

Per Mullick, J.—That in view of the judgment of the High Court declaring that the execution proceedings could only be prosecuted by A. on behalf of all the decree-holders, which judgment not being appealed against had become final, it was no longer open to A. to contend that B. should not have been added as a party to the execution proceedings. JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council filed on behalf of Prakash Chandra Sarkar from an order of a Division Bench of this Court made in its revisional jurisdiction on the 8th December last. The petitioner was one of three brothers who obtained a mortgage decree against Pande Baldeo Ram and others which they executed against the mortgaged property which was situated in Gaya. The decree was executed against the mortgaged property which proved insufficient to satisfy the decree. A decree for the unsatisfied balance was then obtained against the defendants in that suit under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 (now O. XXXIV, r. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code) from the Subordinate Judge of Gaya in the year 1909. The decree was passed in favour of the petitioner and his brothers jointly. The petitioner, subsequently, on the 9th October 1909, applied to the Court at Gaya to transfer the decree to the Subordinate Judge at Ranchi for execution against certain property of the judgment-debtors in that district. He stated in his application that the other decree-holders were unwilling or unable to join in the application and asked that the decree should be transferred as regards his third share only of what remained due to the decree-holders. The other decree-holders were served with notice of the application. One of them, who, we are told, was a lunatic offered no objection and did not appear; the other objected only on the ground that one of the judgment-debtors was dead and proceedings ought to be taken against his representatives. This defect was cured and on the 13th June 1910 it was ordered that the decree be sent to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Ranchi for execution. In the course of execution proceedings, some time later, a certificate of non-satisfaction was sent from the Court at Gaya to that at Ranchi and showed the total amount due which was over Rs. 67,000 of which Rs. 22,371, viz., one-third, together with some interest and costs, it was sought to satisfy in the execution. On execution being taken out the judgment-debtors objected that the procedure was irregular and the Executing Court ordered that the sum realised in execution should not be paid to the applicant without the consent of the other decree-holders. The petitioner appealed from this order to the High Court. The appeal was heard on the 15th August 1917 by the late Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Sharfuddin who considered that the transfer of one-third of the decree was irregular and that the order of transfer could not be held binding upon the respondents, the judgment-debtors, upon whom no notice had been served. They further expressed the opinion that the Executing Court was right in treating the transfer as if it was a transfer of the whole decree and in not allowing the appellant to proceed as if he were the sole decree-holder. They thought, however, that the Court below had gone too far and varied the order by directing that no sum should be paid out of Court to the appellant except on his giving security to the satisfaction of the lower Court to refund the same if required. By O. XXI, r. 15 where a decree has been passed jointly in favour of more persons than one any one or more of them may apply for execution of the whole decree for the benefit of them all, but in such a case the Court is bound to make such order as it deems necessary for protecting the interests of the persons who have not joined in the application. There is no other provision in the Code for enabling one of several joint decree-holders to apply for execution. In that execution it appears that a sum of Rs. 3,000 was realised, the attached property being sold to the decree-holder who was allowed to set off the purchase price against the decretal amount, and the case was dismissed on part satisfaction. A fresh execution case was started in November 1918 in which Brindaban Chandra Sarkar, one of the other decree holders and the respondent in the present appeal, applied to be added as a party. The appellant objected but the learned Subordinate Judge made an order that Brindaban Chandra Sarkar be added as an executing decree-holder in the case together with the appellant, Prakash Chandra Sarkar. The property under attachment was subsequently sold for Rs. 1,300. The appellant moved the High Court in revision contending that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge was without jurisdiction. The High Court rejected the application in revision on the ground that the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to make the order and further that after the decision of this Court, dated the 15th August 1917, which directed that the transfer should be treated as a transfer of the whole decree and that the interests of the other decree-holders should be protected, there was no substance in the appellant's application in revision.

It is from this order that the appellant now seeks to appeal to His Majesty in Council. In my opinion, the application should be rejected. The order now sought to be appealed from is not, in my opinion, a final order determining the rights of the parties in any matter in controversy in the suit. The rights of the parties, in so far as their claim to share in the benefit of the decree was concerned, were settled by the decree itself which was in their favour jointly. If there should be any doubt about that, these rights were further declared by the decision of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Sharfuddin on the 15th August 1917, and the present order is one which relates to procedure only. I may add that the decision of the 15th August 1917 is not now under appeal and cannot, therefore, be questioned. The order now sought to be appealed from is merely a natural corollary of the previous judgment and directs the manner in which the rights of the parties shall be given effect to. Moreover, it appears that it is more than 12 years since the decree was passed and any further application to execute it is time-barred. We are not informed definitely whether the execution case has terminated but as the property has been sold it would appear that this is probably the case. If it is so, it would follow that as the total amount in dispute under the present proceedings is only Rs. 1,300 which is below the statutory limit necessary to enable the appellant to appeal, no further execution proceedings can be taken and it is difficult to see how the present appeal can involve any claim or question to or respecting property of Rs. 10,000 or upwards, even though the unsatisfied balance of the decree should exceed that sum. Whether the execution has terminated it is not necessary to determine, as on the other points the application should, in my opinion, fail. In any case the only appeal permissible from the present decision which is an order in revision would be confined to the question whether or not the Subordinate Court had jurisdiction in the matter. That it had jurisdiction in such a case to protect the interests of the joint decree-holders other than those actually making the application for execution can hardly be doubted in face of the clear provisions of O. XXI, r. 15 and there is not, in my opinion, any substantial question of law to be determined. As the appeal which it is sought to prefer to His Majesty in Council is from a decision of affirmance it seems to me that the application must fail also on this ground.

I would, therefore, dismiss the application

with costs to the respondent. Hearing fee five gold mohurs.

MULLICK, J.—This application arises out of a joint mortgage decree obtained in 1891 by the petitioner, Prakash Chandra Sarkar, and two others.

The decree holders first of all brought the mortgaged properties to sale in the district of Gaya, next they took out execution against the properties other than the mortgaged properties and in 1915 Prakash obtained an order from the District Judge of Gaya transferring one-third of the decree to the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur for execution. The proceedings finally came before the Subordinate Judge of Palamanu and on the 9th December 1916 that learned Judge passed an order that Prakash Chandra Sarkar might proceed with the execution of the decree but would not be permitted to take out any of the proceeds unless the other decree-holders joined with him in applying for payment. It was Prakash Chandra Sarkar's contention before the Subordinate Judge that the District Judge of Gaya had transferred only his separate one-third share in the decree amounting to Rs. 30,516-14-7 and that he alone was competent to prosecute the execution proceedings. He denied that the other two decree-holders were entitled to any share in the proceeds of the execution. Against that order an appeal was preferred to the High Court at Patna and on the 15th August 1917 a Division Bench held that the objection of the judgment-debtors would be sufficiently met if the Subordinate Judge's order were modified and if it were directed that no sum should be paid out to the appellant except on his giving security to the satisfaction of the Court below for the refund of the sum if required. Meanwhile the execution before the Subordinate Judge of Palamanu was proceeding and on the 17th February 1917 certain properties belonging to the judgment-debtors worth Rs. 3,000 were purchased with the permission of the Court by the decree-holder, Prakash Chandra Sarkar, he being allowed to set off the purchase-money against the decretal amount. On the 7th March 1918 the execution case was finally dismissed on part satisfaction.

The next application for execution was made by Prakash Chandra Sarkar on the 28th November 1918 and in the proceedings that followed certain properties belonging to the judgment-debtors were attached; but the sale could not be held, because on the 18th November 1919 Brindaban Chandra Sarkar, one of the co-sharer decree-holders, filed a petition claiming that he was entitled to share in the execution to the extent of his one-third share in the decree. Prakash Chandra Sarkar repeated the objections which he had urged in his appeal in the High Court, but on the 8th January 1920 the Subordinate Judge decided against him and directed that Brindaban Chandra Sarkar should be added as an executing decree-holder and that a fresh sale proclamation should be issued for the sale of the attached properties by inserting his name along with that of Prakash Chandra Sarkar. On the 15th March 1920 the sale was held realising a sum of Rs. 1,300. In the meantime, on the 5th February 1920, Prakash Chandra Sarkar preferred an appeal to the High Court against the Subordinate Judge's order of the 8th January; he also filed an application for revision by way of greater precaution in regard to the same matter. The application for revision but not the appeal was pressed and on the 8th December 1921 Jwala Prasad and Roes, JJ., affirmed the order of the Subordinate Judge and held that Prakash Chandra Sarkar could only execute the decree on behalf of all the decree-holders and that Brindaban Chandra Sarkar was properly added as a party to the execution proceedings.

Leave is now sought to appeal to His Majesty in Council against this order made by the Division Bench.

The substantial questions of law involved are put as follows:—

(1) Although the original mortgage-decree was a joint decree, the share of Prakash Chandra Sarkar being a defined and ascertainable share and admitted to be one-third, there is no bar in law to his prosecuting an application exclusively in respect of his share.

(2) Before the transfer order of the 17th August 1914 was made by the District Judge of Gaya a notice was issued upon the other two decree-holders at the instance of Prakash Chandra Sarkar asking whether they had any objection to his taking out execution in respect of his one-third share. No objection was made and it is contended that the District Judge having ordered execution to proceed only in respect of the amount due to Prakash

VAITHINATHA IYER v. GOVINDASWAMI ODAYAR.

Chandra* Sarkar, Brindaban Chandra Sarkar is now estopped from objecting to the execution of that order.

(3) The order of the District Judge of Gaya transferring the decree is final as regards the right of Prakash Chandra Sarkar to prosecute the proceedings for his own benefit and to the exclusion of his co-sharers, and that the Execution Court in Palamanu has no jurisdiction to go behind the District Judge's order by adding Brindaban Chandra Sarkar and by giving him an interest in the proceeds of the execution.

Now, whatever may be their merits, it appears to me that in the present circumstances these contentions are no longer material. The judgment of the Division Bench of this Court passed on the 15th August 1917 which was not challenged by proceedings in the Privy Council has become final and by it the learned Judges affirmed the order of the Subordinate Judge made on the 9th December 1916 holding that the order of the District Judge of Gaya was irregular and that the execution proceedings could only be prosecuted by Prakash Chandra Sarkar for the benefit of his co-decree-holders. The learned Judges of the High Court expressed this opinion in clear terms but instead of affirming the Subordinate Judge's order which required all the decree-holders to join in an application for withdrawing the sale-proceeds they thought it would be sufficient for the protection of the co-sharers if Prakash were allowed to withdraw the money realised after giving security for the satisfaction of the claims of his co-sharers should they subsequently come forward with a claim. That being so it was no longer open to Prakash Chandra Sarkar to contend that the execution proceedings in Palamanu must be conducted for his sole benefit and there was no defect of jurisdiction or material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction on the part of the Subordinate Judge when on the 8th January 1920 he ordered Brindaban Chandra Sarkar to be added as an executing decree-holder. I presume that in conformity with the orders of the 15th August 1917, the Subordinate Judge, before paying out the money to Prakash and Brindaban, took or will take security for protecting the interest of the remaining decree-holder. But that matter is not before us at the present moment.

A point was made on behalf of the opposite party that the original decree being more than 12 years old is now barred and that no fresh application for execution can be entertained in consequence of the provisions of section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. In the absence of any information as to whether the execution case which was started by the application of the 28th November 1918, namely, Case No. 61 of 1918, has been finally disposed of or is still pending, it is impossible for us to give a decision on this point. But apart from this point there is sufficient material before us for holding that no leave should be given in this case.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Contract—Penal terms—Test—Chit fund—Special relation between stake-holder and subscribers—Bond, execution of, by prize-winner for payment of future instalments—Provision for forfeiture of dividend, interest and premium in default of any instalment and liability for whole amount with enhanced interest, whether penal—Instalment bond—Failure to enforce terms on some defaults—Waiver.

The test to determine the penal nature of the terms of a contract is, whether the terms are unreasonable as a whole and whether in fact they are so unreasonable that the parties never contemplated that they should receive effect. [p. 997, col. 1.]

A stake-holder of a chit fund stands in a special relation to its subscribers by reason of the fact that he alone is liable to each subscriber and there is no liability between the subscribers inter se; and without punctual payments by the individual subscribers the stake-holder cannot discharge his liabilities to the successful bidders as they arise. Such relation justifies stringency in the conditions of payment by subscribers and, in particular, in the rate of interest provided for in cases of default. [p. 997, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a successful bidder at a chit fund executes a bond to the stake-holder for an amount representing the sum total of future instalments payable by him which provides that, in default of payment of any instalment, the executant would not only forfeit the dividend, interest and premium but become liable to pay the entire amount immediately with enhanced interest at the rate of 18 per cent. per annum the stipulations are neither unreasonable nor penal. The waiver by a creditor to enforce the terms of an instalment bond on the falling due of a few instalments does not affect his right to use the coercive measures provided therein in cases of future default. [p. 997, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam, in Original Suit No. 59 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar and O. V. Rajagopalacharair, for the Appellants.—The lower Court has wrongly construed the terms of the bond to be penal. It overlooked the large responsibilities of the stake-holder of a chit fund to his subscribers. He alone is responsible to each individual subscriber. He has to pay the prizes punctually and he can only do so if the subscribers are punctual in payment. Stringent provisions have to be made to enforce punctual payments. The provisions in the bond cannot be said to be unreasonable. See Periasami Thalavar v. Subramanian Asari (1) and Gundala Venkatarama Dos; Panthulu Garu v. Thorada Fulliah, Second Appeal No. 23 of 1902.

The fact that the plaintiff did not enforce the stringent provisions when the third and fourth instalments fell due should not deprive him of his right to exercise the option in cases of future default. MacLaine v. Gatty (2).

Mr. S. Subramania Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The stipulation for immediate payment of the whole amount in case of default of any instalment, the enhanced interest, the forfeiture of the subscribers' right to dividend and premium are distinctly penal. Whereas the defendant has to pay only Rs. 1,000 for each instalment, the bond substitutes practically a larger liability in case of default. See MacLaine v. Gatty (2). If there is a pro rata distribution of profits the defendant might even have to pay less. See also Wallis v. Smith (3).

(3) (1882) 21 Ch. D. 243; 52 L. J. Ch. 145; 47 L. T. 389; 31 W. R. 214.

Also, the plaintiff not having enforced the penal terms when the 3rd and 4th instalments fell due has waived his right and cannot afterwards enforce it.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of the defendant's default in connection with a chit conducted by the plaintiff. The defendant was the successful bidder at the second auction held and afterwards paid the third, fourth and fifth instalments correctly. He defaulted in payment of the sixth instalment and the plaintiff is now attempting to recover the money on the bond, which, on taking the prize at the second auction, the defendant executed. The lower Court has held that the terms of the kararnama, Exhibit A, are penal and not enforceable and it has accordingly given relief to the defendant in a manner to be particularly explained with reference to the conditions under which the chit was worked. Exhibit A shows that the chit was to be in 12 instalments, the subscription for each being Rs. 1,000. The instalments were at intervals of six months. The total subscription for the first instalment went to the stake-holder and that for the last instalment went to any subscriber, who had not bid at any of the intermediate instalments. The subscription at each of these intermediate instalments was available for loan to the successful bidder at the auction, which was held every six months, the successful bidder being the bidder who offered to accept the lowest proportion of the total subscription. The other provisions to be referred to are that, in case the subscribers failed to pay their subscriptions, they were not only to forfeit the dividend, interest and premium, which will next be explained, but were also to pay the whole amount on demand with interest thereon at $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per mensem from the date of the auction; and it was provided further that the successful bidders should, in each case within 15 days, execute documents to the stake-holder for the due payment of the chit amounts of the subsequent instalments and for abiding by the terms of Exhibit A; Exhibit B being the document executed by the defendant. Reference has been made to the dividend and interest. The dividend apparently refers to the amount to be distributed among the subscribers by deduction from the amount payable by them of the difference between Rs. 12,000, the nominal amount available at cash auction, and the amount which the successful bidder agreed to accept instead of it. Interest is explained as being the sum of Rs. 720, which the agreement provides was to be deducted from the nominal amount of the subscriptions at each instalment for interest due for the ensuing six months, the principle being, apparently, that the subscribers who had not been successful at that auction were to be compensated by deductions from what they had to pay for use of their money during the six months.

The lower Court on these terms has observed that the agreement is penal in three respects, firstly, the liability of the defaulter for future instalments from the date of his default, secondly, his deprivation of the dividend and interest above referred to, and, thirdly, the imposition on him of liability for interest on the amount due from him at 18 per cent. from the date of his default; and it has further said that, although each of the said three stipulations taken by itself may not amount to a penal stipulation, yet the three together are penal and should be relieved against. It has given relief by awarding the actual amount of payments, which the defendant would have had to make on account of each instalment if he had not defaulted, together with a reasonable compensation of Rs. 50 in connection with each default.

In reaching this conclusion the lower Court has, it seems to us, entirely lost sight of the most material element in the case. It had, speaking generally, to decide whether these terms were unreasonable as a whole and whether in fact they were so unreasonable that the parties never contemplated that they should receive effect. Yet throughout the whole of the lower Court's judgment we find no mention of the special relation, in which the stake-holder of the chit is to the subscribers and the special necessity for provision for protection of his interest in the agreement, by which those relations are regulated. That this relation is of a special nature and justifies stringency in those conditions and in particular in the rate of interest provided for in cases of default has been clearly recognised in the decisions in Ferisami Thalavar v. Subramaniam Asari (1) and Gundala Venkatarama Doss Panthulu Garu v. Thorada Pulliah, Second Appeal No. 23 of 1902, with which we respectfully agree. The stake-holder has necessarily to depend on punctual payments from his subscribers and to reserve to himself powers to enforce such payments. For the stake-holder alone is liable to each subscriber and there is no liability between the subscribers inter se; and without punctual payments by the individual subscribers the stake-holder could not discharge his liabilities to the successful bidders, as they arose. In Exhibit A in fact the stake-holder is given exceptional powers, including the power to remove a subscriber who makes default during the currency of the chit and to introduce a new subscriber in his stead. Looking at the transaction as a whole, as defined by Exhibit A, we are unable to hold that any of the conditions are unreasonable or are such as the parties might not naturally recognise should regulate the exceptional relations between them. Generally, therefore, we cannot treat any of them as penal. In these circumstances we turn to the two arguments on which the lower Court has relied.

The lower Court has firstly attached importance to the waiver by the plaintiff of his right to enforce the terms of Exhibit B in connection with the fourth and fifth instalments. We need only refer to MacLaine v. Gatty (2), as an authority for the position that such a waiver does not affect the creditor's right to use the coercive measures provided by his bond in cases of future default.

Next, full argument was addressed to us to show that the stipulations to which reference has been made are essentially penal. Wallis v. Smith (3) was cited and reference was also made to Thompson v. Hudson (4). In the former of these authorities the question directly under consideration was the effect of default in payment of the prescribed sum of money in connection with the breach of one or other of a number of obligations, an obligation to pay a far smaller sum of money being one of them. That is not directly applicable here. It was only incidentally in the course of the judgments, particularly in that of Lord Justice Lindley, that the principle on which the defendant now relies was referred to. That principle, which is fully supported by the second case already cited, is shortly that no substitution of liability for a large sum in case of default for a smaller sum will be enforced by the Court. But, though that principle can be accepted at once, it is not sufficient for the decision of the case; for we are not satisfied that the substitution of a large sum of money for a smaller one is in question (Exhibits A and B). It is urged that there is such a substitution, inasmuch as Exhibit B is for instalments calculated each at Rs. 1,000, whereas the instalment actually payable in each case was less, firstly, because it should have included only what the defendant had to pay if he had continued without default, and, next, in view of the deduction which under Exhibit A was to be made from each subscription on account of interest as already explained, the benefit of each of these deductions being forfeited under Exhibit B.

(1) (1869) 4 H. L. 1; 38 L. J. Ch. 431.

With reference to the first objection it can only be said that both Exhibits A and B are clear. They provide for the defendant's liability for the whole amount of each subscription and not for the amount which he might have turned out liable for. In fact it is difficult to say how any other arrangement could have been made. The lesser amount which the defendant contends should have been made the basis of his liability could not be ascertained until each auction was held; and it may be observed on the other side that, if the amount which the plaintiff would have been entitled to receive were to be the measure of the defendant's liability, it is difficult to avoid the argument that the amount which the plaintiff would have had to expend in order to find money by borrowing for distribution to the shareholders should also have been taken into account. We can readily understand that the arrangement in case of default was for a fixed liability and not for a sum which could not be ascertained when the default occurred; and we, therefore, read Exhibit A, as imposing a liability of the former description. Then as regards interest we think the tenor of Exhibit A is clear. The subscription is always referred to as one of Rs. 1,000 per instalment and the amount of interest is referred to as the sum to be deducted from the Rs. 12,000. There is no question of the defendant being liable only for the net amount.

In these circumstances, we allow the appeal and modify the lower Court's decree by substituting a decree for the amount claimed in the plaint with interest and costs in both Courts: Time for redemption, six months from this date.

Landlord and tenant—Excess rent for excess area, suit for—Finding essential for disposal of suit—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 52—Final Court of fact, duty of—Findings of fact to be clearly expressed—Appeal, second.

In a suit for excess rent for excess area in respect of a tenancy the finding that there is nothing to show that at the inception of the tenancy rent was settled or that it was understood that rent should be settled by assessment on area, is not sufficient for the disposal of the controversy between the parties. The landlord's case does not depend on his being able to prove what had happened at the inception of the tenancy. If the landlord can show that since the creation of the tenancy rent had been assessed, and that when rent was last assessed the assessment was on the basis of a certain area and that the defendants are in possession of land on which no rent was assessed at the time, then the landlord is entitled to increase of rent. The Court should come to a finding whether or not there has ever been assessment of rent on the basis of area and, if so, whether that area is less than the land found to be held by the tenant at the time of the suit [p. 999, col. 2.]

JOGENDBA KISHORE ROY CHOUDHURY v. SHRIKE ARTAR.

1918, reversing that of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Netrakona, dated the 16th of May 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chakravarty, (with him Babu Ramani Mohan Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—The lower Appellate Court was wrong in setting aside the order of the first Court for additional rent. It was not for the landlord to prove the area of the plot at the inception of the tenancy, that is for the tenant to prove. The landlord has proved all that he could. When there is an intermediate adjustment in 1806 B. S., why should the plaintiff be required to go back to the inception of the tenancy as regards area and rent? Refers to Durga Priya Choudhury v. Hazra Gain (1). Refers to section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The landlord has to prove the area previous to the present claim. The comparison which would disclose the excess is the comparison with the last assessment. The Special Judge cast upon me a burden which is unnecessarily heavy. There was an adjustment before the present claim. Refers to section 52, sub-section 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. No party required the Court to make any investigation into the early history of the tenancy. Burden shifts on the tenant, Dhrupad Chandra Koley v. Harinath Singha Roy (2). Refers to Lakhi Narain Sarangi v. Sri Ram Chandra Bhunya (3). When I have showed excess and have made out a prima facie case, the burden of proof is shifted to the tenant to prove that there was a consolidated rent. See Lakhi Narain Sarangi v. Sri Ram Chandra Bhunya (3).

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Respondents.—It is clear from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that he does not believe that there was ever any assessment of rent based on the area held by the tenant. His findings are clear and conclusive and cannot be challenged in second appeal. The landlord has not proved on which basis the rent was assessed.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chakravarty briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decision of, the Special Judge of Mymensingh reversing the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer of that District. The main point arising in this appeal is whether the learned Judge has rightly held that the plaintiff appellant is not entitled to excess rent for excess area. The Assistant Settlement Officer found that the areas of the holdings in certain khatians were larger at the time of the Survey and Settlement than the measurements shown in the landlord's papers, and on this basis granted the landlords additional rent for additional area. This decision has been reversed on the finding that there is nothing to show that at the inception of the tenancies rents were settled or that it was understood that rents should be settled by assessment on areas.

This finding is not sufficient for the disposal of the question. The learned Judge appears to have fallen into the error similar to that pointed out by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Durga Priya Choudhury v. Hazra Gain (1). There it was held that the landlord's case did not depend on his being able to prove what happened at the inception of the tenancy. If the landlord can show that since the creation of the tenancy, rent had been assessed, and that when rent was last assessed, the assessment was on the basis of a certain area and that the defendants are in possession of land in which no rent was assessed at the time, then the landlord is entitled to increase of rent. The learned Special Judge has not found whether or not there has ever been assessment of rent on the basis of area and, if so, whether that area is less than the land now found to be held by the tenants. He has not come to a finding on the essential point whether the tenant is in occupation of the land in which rent had not been assessed and for which he is bound to pay rent. It is contended on behalf of the defendants-tenants that from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court it is clear that he does not believe that there was ever any assessment of rent based on the area held by the tenant. But it is the duty of the Judge in his judgment when sitting as the final Court of fact to state clearly what his findings are, and this Court sitting in second appeal cannot deduce from casual statements in the judgment findings of fact which are not clearly expressed.

Two other points were taken on behalf of the appellant, but there is no substance in

(1) 62 Ind. Cas. 458; 25 C. W. N. 204.

(2) 45 Ind. Cas. 660; 22 C. W. N. 826; 27 C. L. J. 563.

MUHAMMAD AFZAR v. MANKUMAR MAHTON.

them. One is that the finding of the length of the Gaj 22½ inches is not justifiable. This is a question of fact and no question of law arises in this connection. The next point is that the lower Appellate Court should not have remanded the case in respect to khatians Nos. 171 and 181 for finding whether the rents were mukarari or not. The issue as to this was clearly made in the written statement, and as no issue was formally framed before the Court there cannot be held to be any waiver of this contention because the Assistant Settlement Officer when writing his judgment omitted to include this in the issues; nor was the learned Special Judge debarred from holding a finding on this issue necessary because the point was not expressly raised as regards khatian No. 171 in the grounds of appeal to him. The appeal raised the question of the enhancement of rent in khatian No. 171 and that was sufficient to justify the appellant's Pleader arguing the point, that the holding was mukarari when the appeal was heard.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court in so far as it relates to enhanced rent under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is set aside and the case sent back to that Court to be re-heard in the light of the observations we have made.

The costs will abide the result.

Inherent power of Court, exercise of—Consent of parties—Consolidation of suits.

The consent of parties is not a condition precedent to the exercise by a Court of the powers conferred upon it by section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code; a Court, therefore, has jurisdiction under the section to consolidate suits without the consent of the parties.

JUDGMENT.

COURTS, J.—This is an application in revision against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Patna consolidating two suits. It is not contended that the learned Subordinate Judge had not jurisdiction under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to consolidate the suits; and that he has such jurisdiction has been held not only in this Court but in other High Courts in India and I may refer particularly to the case of Kali Oharan Dutt v. Manodabala Dasi [Surja Kumar Mondal] (1) where this matter was very fully considered. It is contended, however, that the jurisdiction under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, cannot be exercised without the consent of parties. No authority has been adduced in support of this contention and I am unable to accept it. It seems clear that if the Court has jurisdiction to consolidate under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, it must have that jurisdiction without the consent of parties. If this were not so, it would not have inherent jurisdiction to consolidate at all, for, consent of parties cannot confer a jurisdiction that does not exist.

It is not for us in revision to consider whether, in this particular case, consolidation should have been allowed or not, but I may remark that, in my opinion, the Court has exercised its jurisdiction wisely. I would accordingly dismiss this application with costs. Hearing fee three gold mohurs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 7, 52, of enhancement of rent, if can be taken up.

Where in Settlement proceedings under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a landlord applies for excess rent for excess area as also for enhancement of rent but abandons his claim to the latter claim and the question of the enhancement of rent is not gone into and only a decree for excess rent for excess area is passed, it is not open to the Special Judge on appeal to decree an enhancement of rent on the principles of section 7 of the Act. Having regard to the provisions of section 52 of the Act the Special Judge should only confine himself to the question of fair and equitable rent. [p. 1002, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Special Judge, Midnapur, dated the 2nd June 1919, modifying that of the Assistant Settlement Officer, Camp I Salboni, dated the 26th July 19:7.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Karunamoy Bose, (with him Babu Panchanon Ghose), for the Appellants.—The defendants are the appellants. The appeal arises out of proceedings under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act by the plaintiff. The plaintiff originally applied for additional rent for additional area and also for enhancement of rent but subsequently the last claim was given up. So no issues were raised on the point and the question was not gone into. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 98 for additional rent but the Assistant Settlement gave a decree for Rs. 65 only. On appeal, the Special Judge gave a decree for Rs. 128. I submit section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application, inasmuch as there was no claim for enhancement of rent. The case should have been decided under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act only. My next point is that the plaintiff not having substituted within time the deceased respondent the appeal to the lower Appellate Court had abated. Hence the present decree appealed against cannot stand.

Mr. U. N. Sen Gupta, (with him Batu Probodh Kumar Das), for the Respondent.—As regard the first point, I submit the Courts below took into consideration the assets of the tenure. Section 7 has been rightly applied by the Special Judge. As regard the second point, it is concluded by the findings of fact based upon the materials in the record. If you are against me on the first point then the case should go back.

Babu Karunamoy Bose replied in brief.

JUDGMENT.—This matter comes up before us by way of appeal and revision and arises out of proceedings under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair rent.

So far as the present case (No. 271) is concerned, although the plaintiff applied for additional rent for additional area and also for enhancement of rent, when the matter came up before the Assistant Settlement Officer the latter claim appears to have been abandoned. The Assistant Settlement Officer states as follows:—"In Cases Nos. 271 and 51, the plaintiff claimed additional rents in the plaints but in the rest of the applications they claimed, besides additional rents, enhancement of rent under section 30 (a) and 30 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act." The issues framed in the case show that, so far as the present case is concerned, there was no issue as to enhancement of rent. The excess area was found by the Settlement Officer and the excess rent was calculated on a certain basis. In the result, Rs. 65.3.6 was the rent settled.

There was an appeal by the plaintiff to the Additional Special Judge. The learned Judge was of opinion that the obvious course was to fix the rent on the principles of section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and he held that Rs. 128 should be the rent payable by the defendant although the plaintiff claimed only Rs. 98.

We think that the learned Judge was wrong in enhancing the rent, with reference to the provisions of section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The question whether the rent should be enhanced or not, was not gone into by the Court of first instance. As pointed out above, the only question set out in the beginning of the judgment of that Court was what was the additional rent for the additional area.

It is pointed out by the learned Counsel on behalf of the respondent that the Assistant Settlement Officer did, as a matter of fact, consider the assets of the tenure in the present case and that, therefore, it must be taken that he considered the question whether the rent of the defendants should be enhanced; and that, although no reference to section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was made in the plaint, it was sufficient for the landlord to pray for settlement of fair and equitable rent and to state the grounds upon which the alteration of rent was claimed.

But if the Assistant Settlement Officer considered the question of assets for the purpose of enhancement of the rent, he was wrong in doing so, because, having regard to the manner in which the case was treated in the Court of first instance, and having regard to the issues, the defendants had no opportunity of adducing evidence on the point whether the rent should be enhanced.

We think, therefore, that the learned Special Judge ought not to have considered the question of enhancement but should have confined himself to the question of fair and equitable rent having regard to the provisions of section 52 of the Act.

We may mention that a batch of second appeals from the decision of the same Special Judge came up to this Court and there also in the original application, enhancement was claimed on a two-fold ground, namely, first, additional rent was claimed for excess area and, secondly, rent was claimed at a higher rate than that paid by the defendants on the ground that they paid at a lower rate than was paid by other tenants for adjoining lands. But when the case came before the Assistant Settlement Officer, the claim for enhancement (i.e., the second ground) was abandoned and the claim was restricted to additional rent for excess area. There, also, the plaintiff appealed against the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer, who made a decree for additional rent for the excess area to the Special Judge, and the latter increased the rent as assessed by the Settlement Officer. This was not merely on the ground that the additional rent was payable in respect of excess lands but also that rent was payable at a higher rate than was paid by the tenants. It was observed by Mookerjee, A. O. J. (Fletcher, J., agreeing) that "the proceedings must be taken on the basis that the rent for the original area was to remain unaltered." We think that the observations apply to this case also.

We ought to mention that another ground was taken on behalf of the appellant, namely, that the appeal to the lower Appellate Court abated by reason of no substitution having been made within six months of the death of the respondent. The Court below has decided the question in favour of the plaintiff, and, although the observations made by the Judge are open to criticism, we think it was open to him to come to the conclusion at which he arrived, upon the affidavit and other evidences in the case.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and the case is sent back to that Court in order that the learned Special Judge may assess the additional rent for additional area without taking into consideration any question of enhancement of rent.

Costs will abide the result.

This order disposes of the Rule. We allow no separate costs in the Rule.

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 1st June 1914.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Mr. Mukand Lal, Puri, for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., and Bhagat Gobind Das, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—The plaintiffs are first cousins of Gauri Shankar, a Bari Khatri of the town of Jagraon in the Ludhiana District, who died on the 1st February 1903, and the defendants are his widow, daughter, daughter's son and son-in-law. The plaintiffs allege that Gauri Shankar's widow, Musammot Kishen Devi, defendant No. 1, is wasting the property left by her husband, and has given some of it to her son-in-law, Rattan Chand, defendant No. 4, and they ask for the appointment of a Receiver for the management and protection of the property, for the issue of an injunction to Musammot Kishen Devi, and for a declaration that the alienation which they allege she has made in favour of Rattan Chand shall be void as against them. They allege that the entire property is ancestral and that some of it belonged jointly to them and Gauri Shankar. They claim a right to restrain Musammot Kishen Devi from wasting and alienating the property on two grounds, (1) that by custom they are entitled to inherit the property on Musammot Kishen Devi's death to the exclusion of her daughter and daughter's son, and (2) that Gauri Shankar made a Will by which he declared that the plaintiffs would be his heirs after Musammot Kishen Devi's death.

The defendants traverse the plaintiffs' allegation, and maintain that the plaintiffs have no locus standi.

The main issues in the case are on the questions of custom and the execution of a Will by Gauri Shankar. The lower Court has dismissed the suit, finding (1) that the plaintiffs have failed to prove a custom by which they are entitled to succeed to the property to the exclusion of the daughter and daughter's son, and that the parties are governed by Hindu Law, and (2) that the plaintiffs have not proved that Gauri Shankar executed any Will. The plaintiffs have appealed.

Mr. Tek Chand, who appears on their behalf, has criticised the proceedings of the learned District Judge in certain respects. He has urged that his clients were not allowed to inspect the defendants' account books for which they had applied, and were not given full opportunity of arguing their case. Nothing is said, however, in regard to these matters in the memorandum of appeal, and the only purposes for which it is contended that the case should be remanded are, (1) in order that a commission may issue to test the instances of succession mentioned by the defendant's witnesses, and (2) in order that plaintiffs may be allowed to produce certain evidence which the lower Court has excluded.

With regard to the first point, a very large number of witnesses were produced on both sides on the question of custom, and we see no reason for directing the issue of a commission. There is, however, force in Mr. Tek Chand's contention on the second point.

In the first place, the lower Court after the 1st October 1912 appears to have declined to take evidence as to whether the property in dispute was ancestral or not; see the plaintiffs' application dated the 2nd October 1912 and the Court's order thereon on the 5th October on page 65 of the paper-book. The plaintiffs might possibly succeed in proving a custom by which collaterals succeed to ancestral property in preference to a daughter, but fail to prove a custom by which collaterals exclude a daughter from succession to non-ancestral property, and in that event it would be necessary to determine which portions, if any, of the property in dispute are ancestral.

In the second place, the District Judge has refused to take the evidence of several witnesses whom the plaintiffs wished to examine in regard to the execution and loss of the Will; see pages 170 and 171 of the paper-book. The plaintiffs had had the witnesses summoned and were entitled to examine them. Non-service of the summonses was due to the Court having given insufficient time for their being served, and not to any fault on the plaintiffs' part.

Mr. Govind Das on behalf of the defendants points out that the plaintiffs applied for Probate of the Will, but that after a caveat had been lodged by Gauri Shanker's daughter they withdrew from the application, which was consequently dismissed (page 524 of the paper-book). He argues that under O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs are debarred from suing on the basis of the Will after that withdrawal.

We are of opinion that O. XXIII, r. 1, does not apply to Probate proceedings. The provision in section 55 of the Probate and Administration Act that the proceedings in the Court of the District Judge in relation to the granting of Probate shall be regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure is qualified by the words "so far as the circumstances of the case will admit." It was held in Ghellaabhai v. Nandubai (1) that a Probate application cannot be referred to arbitration. In Janakbati Thakurain v. Gajaind Thakur (2) it was held that there can be no dismissal of a Probate case in accordance with the terms of a compromise between the proponent and the objector. In Jugeshwar Nath Sahai v. Jagatdhari Prasad (3) the same view was taken, and it was further held that O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply to an application for Probate. Kalyanchand Lalchand v. Sitabai Dhanrao (4) which has been referred to by Mr. Govind Dass, is not in point, as in that case Probate was refused because the Will was held to be not proved, and there was no withdrawal from the application for Probate.

Even if it were held that O. XXIII, r. 1, applies, the plaintiffs would not be precluded from bringing the present claim on the basis of the Will. In the statements made by them in the Probate proceedings on the 23rd June 1911, they said that they intended to file a regular suit, and asked for permission to withdraw from their application, by which they clearly meant permission to withdraw with liberty to institute a suit, for under O. XXIII, r. 1, a plaintiff can withdraw his suit without any permission if he does not at the same time ask for leave to institute a fresh suit. After the plaintiffs' statements had been taken the Court on the same date passed its order permitting the plaintiffs to withdraw from the application, and dismissing it. That order has to be read with the statements on which it was passed, and it must be construed as granting permission to the plaintiffs to file a suit. Keelangothi Narayana Tantri v. Nagappa (5) and Golam Mahmud v. Shibendra Lada Banerjee (6), which are cited by Mr. Tek Chand in this connection, are in point.

Mr. Govind Das contends that permission to bring a fresh suit must be given in express terms, and he relies on Ghulam Ali

BEHARI LAL NANDI V. NRITYANANDA GHOSE.

Shah v. Shahabul Shah (7) and Jita Singh v. Hari Singh (8). It is true that the learned Judges who decided Ghulam Ali Shah v. Shahabul Shah (7) said in their judgment that the permission required by section 373 of the Civil Procedure Code then in force must be given in express terms, but this was an obiter dictum, as it was found that in that particular case not even an implied permission to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit could be inferred from the order passed on the application made in the previous suit, which was merely an application informing the Court of the compromise and asking that the suit might be consigned to the record room.

Jita Singh v. Hari Singh (8) is no doubt in point and supports Mr. Govind Das' contention, but it was a ruling of a Single Judge and was based merely on the obiter dictum in Ghulam Ali Shah v. Shahabul Shah (7).

It is not stated in Order XXIII, rule 1, that the permission mentioned therein must be express, and, in our opinion, it is sufficient if the grant of permission can be implied from the order, read with the application on which the order was made.

Mr. Govind Das also contends that permission to withdraw from the application for Probate with liberty to bring a regular suit could not legally have been granted to the plaintiffs, because there was no formal defect in the application and there were no sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiffs to institute a suit. But we think that it is not open to the defendants to question the propriety of the order granting the permission, which has become final. Ohhajru v. Khyali Ram (9) is in point in this connection.

We hold, therefore, that even if O. XXIII, r. 1, were considered to be applicable, the necessary permission to bring a suit was given to the plaintiffs by the order of the 23rd June 1911, and that they are entitled to maintain the present suit on the basis of the Will. We remand the case to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Ludhiana, under O. XLI, r. 28, Civil Procedure Code, and direct him to take the evidence which the parties may have to produce on the question which portions, if any, of the property in dispute are ancestral, and also the evidence of the remaining witnesses for the plaintiffs mentioned in the statement of the plaintiffs' Pleader on the 27th May 1914 in regard to the Will, as well as the evidence of the witnesses, if any, whom the defendants may wish to produce in reply. After taking the evidence the Senior Subordinate Judge should return the record to this Court.

BEHARI LAL NANDI v. NRITYANANDA GHOSE.

Nath Roy, for the Appellants, submitted that, on the question of limitation, it was not enough to say that the defendant No. 1 had been in possession. It must be found that there was an ouster of the plaintiff by the defendant. The finding of the Trial Court is (at page 40 of the paper-book) that both the plaintiff and the defendant were exercising acts of possession. In such a case it cannot be said that the plaintiff was dispossessed. Brojendra Kishore Roy v. Bharat Chandra Roy [Sarojini Ray] (1), Sheikh Sohnur Ali Hazarika v. J. Buttman (2) and the other cases cited by the Trial Court. The possession in such a case must be deemed to be with the plaintiff Jones v. Chapman (3).

[CHATTERJEE, J.—The finding of the Trial Court is not accepted by the Appellate Court which says the plaintiff was dispossessed in 1306.]

I have adduced evidence to show my possession within 12 years, but the Appellate Court has been pleased to disbelieve that. I submit in such a case the position is the same as if I had adduced no evidence. Then, having regard to the nature of the land, which is alluvial, a presumption ought to be drawn in favour of the possession of the plaintiff, and then it has to be considered whether the acts of possession by the defendants constitute an ouster of the plaintiff.

Further, whatever dispossession there was in 1306 was dispossession of a lessee, and that cannot be a dispossession of the lessor: Hajra Sardara v. Kunja Behari Nag (4).

On the question of a new case being made, this is one of those cases where the Court ought to allow variance between pleading and proof, as there cannot be any surprise to the other party. The evidence would be the same in either case. The 5th issue is sufficiently elastic to cover title by accretion—it says "any other title." The case of Raja Rup Singh v. Rani Baieni (5) is a case where the matter was not clearly set out in the plaint but was raised in the issues and that was held to be enough. In Motabhoj Mulla

v. Mula Harihar (6) by a mere amendment of the pleadings the question could have been set out and the parties also went to trial upon it, and it was held that the fact that the amendment was not made should not debar a consideration of the question. In Sree Eckowrie Sing v. Heeraloll Seal (7) which is a converse case to the present, the charge was attempted at the appellate stage and was hence disallowed.

On the question of title, the mistake of the learned Judge is to think that title by accretion can be acquired only by the recess of a navigable river.

Reads from Bengal Regulation XI of 1825, section IV, clause 3; whether the char thrown up belongs to the Crown (the river being navigable) or to a private proprietor (the river being non-navigable), in either case it is subject to the rule in clause 1.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Asirangan Chatterjee, for the Respondent.—The short answer is limitation.

Previous possession is alleged and the suit is based on subsequent dispossession. Therefore, Article 142 applies: Mohima Chunder v. Mohesh Chunder (8). My friend did not expressly contend that Art. 144 applied, but he wanted a presumption to be drawn in his favour having regard to the nature of the land. But the land was capable of enjoyment in the ordinary mode from 1294 and had been cultivated up to 1303—refers to plaint paragraph 6: that is their case and that is the evidence.

[CHATTERJEE, J.—That has been disbelieved. Babu Mohendra Nath contended that the position was the same as if no evidence had been given by him.]

The question is whether the land was capable of being possessed.

The finding of the lower Court upon the question of possession has been displaced. There is no suggestion that the question of possession was dependant upon the peculiar nature of the land. Such a question might arise in the case of land still subject to incurSION of water, but that is not the case here.

[CHATTERJEE, J.—If the plaintiff adduces evidence of possession and that is disbelieved, can the plaintiff say "I have title, you must presume possession in my favour?"]

I submit not. The plaintiff came to Court with a particular case and directed evidence on that. And when that is disbelieved, he cannot turn round and say, "Because I have title, I am relieved from showing possession within 12 years." The case of Ram Bandhu v. Kusu Bhattu (9) shows that where there is evidence of possession no presumption can be resorted to. Having become fit for enjoyment and been cultivated before 12 years before suit, this chur land is exactly on the same footing as any other land, and no presumption can be drawn.

[CHATTERJEE, J., refers to an unreported judgment delivered by his Lordship on 13th January 1922 (since reported: Rakhal Chandra Ghose v. Durga Das (10)) and Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State (11).]

In this last case Art. 144 applied, the defendant had to establish his title by adverse possession. Here the party come to Court with the allegation of possession and dis-possession and that attracts Art. 142. The findings are conclusive on this point.

On the other question, the Trial Court was wrong in allowing a new case, viz., of accretion, to be made. Prayer (ka) of the plaint shows he was claiming title to the land as a reformation in situ. There was no issue up on this point. Refers to Sree Eckowrie Sing v. Heeraloll Seal (7), Eshenchunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhutto (12), Malraju Lukshmi Venkayamma Row v. Venkatadri Appa Row (13). The question of accretion was raised because I raised the question. That would not entitle the plaintiff to make a different title from that with which he has come to Court.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy briefly replied.

The disputed one bigha has been found to be an accretion to another 12 cottas of land. The 12 cottas of land was found by the Court of first instance to belong to the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court, however, was of opinion that the plaintiffs could not succeed, because they had not set up a case of accretion but had set up a case of re-formation in situ, and he gave also other reasons for deciding the question of title against the plaintiffs.

It is unnecessary, however, to discuss the question of title as we think that the finding upon the question of limitation disposes of the case. It has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation as they had failed to prove possession within 12 years of the suit.

It is contended before us on the assumption that the plaintiffs are the rightful owners, (as it must be assumed for the purpose of considering the question of limitation without deciding the question of title), that in order to constitute dispossession of the rightful owner by a trespasser, it is not sufficient to show the trespasser's possession but it is also necessary to show the cessation of the owner's possession. Our attention is drawn to a finding of the Court of first instance, namely, that "the nature of the disputed land is such that it is not improbable that for sometime both the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1 used the land, for neither party was in actual personal possession and none of the grain-dealers or boat-makers or boat-repairers who actually used the land was in occupation of the whole of the land, and as they had but transitory interest in the land in their occupation, they would not ordinarily question the right of entry of another person upon a different portion of the disputed land. The mere fact that the defendant No. 1 through his tenants did some acts of possession on the disputed land would not necessarily amount to the plaintiff's dispossession."

It is true, as pointed out by Banerji, J. in the case of Sheikh Sohnur Ali Hazarika v. J. Huttman (2), that there is no dispossession unless there is termination of the possession of the rightful owner followed by the actual possession of another.

In the case of Jones v. Chapman (3) Maule, J., observed:—

"If there are two persons in a field,

BEHARI LAL NANDI v. NEITTAMANDA GHOSH.

each asserting that the field is his, and each doing some act in the assertion of the right of possession, and if the question is, which of those two is in actual possession, I answer, the person who has the title is, in actual possession, and the other person is a trespasser."

Upon the facts as found by the Court of first instance, both parties were in possession through temporary tenants, each exercising acts of possession over different portions of the land for temporary periods. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, on appeal has not accepted that case for the plaintiffs. He has considered the evidence adduced by the plaintiff and disbelieved it. He finds "there can, therefore, be no doubt that from 1306 at least the defendant No. 1 has been in possession on his own behalf." The suit was instituted 15 years after 1306. Further on, the learned Judge finds that the plaintiffs were dispossessed by defendant No. 1.

It is contended, however, that even if the plaintiffs' witnesses were disbelieved, the learned Judge ought to have considered whether the evidence of the defendants as to possession was such as to constitute ouster of the plaintiff, having regard to the character of the land and the nature of possession said to have been exercised, and, if not, whether there was not any presumption in favour of the rightful owner.

But the case of the plaintiffs themselves was that before 1310, the land was actually in the cultivation of their tenants, that in 1310 there was a surrender and that subsequently the plaintiffs were in possession by letting out the land to grain-dealers and for the purpose of boat-repairs and other acts. The plaintiff's case, therefore, was not that the land was incapable of enjoyment though the land was not cultivated. The defendant's case was that he was in continuous possession of the entire land (as part of his jama) through tenants. If, therefore, according to both parties, definite acts of ownership were exercised over the land the Court must decide the case upon the evidence adduced by the parties without resorting to any presumption.

In the case of Ram Bandhu v. Kusu Bhattu (9) Garth, C. J., observed: "As long as reliable evidence of acts of ownership is forthcoming, there is no difference between the proof of possession in the case of jungle or uncultivated lands, and that in the case of cultivated lands, any such proof is often times forthcoming.....But it does sometimes happen that neither party to a suit has exercised any acts of ownership at all over the land in question which are capable of proof; and then in the doubt created by such absence of proof, or of reliable proof, the Court is obliged to resort to evidence of title, and to presume that the party who has the title has also the possession. But in the present case there would seem to be evidence of at least some acts of ownership; and if so, it would be right for the Court to decide the case upon that evidence, so far as the question of possession is concerned, without resorting to the proof of title."

It may be pointed out that the words "reliable evidence" "or reliable proof" in the decision quoted above appear to have been used in the sense of definite and unequivocal acts of ownership which can be acted upon, because the learned Judges observed: "But in the present case there would seem to be evidence of at least some acts of ownership": the matter was before this Court in second appeal and this Court directed the lower Court to decide the case upon the evidence of possession. This Court in second appeal could not possibly express any opinion whether the evidence was "reliable" in the sense that the evidence could be believed.

In the present case the land was not jungle land, and although uncultivated subsequent to 1310, it was the case of both parties that the land was let to grain-dealers and for the purpose of boat-repairs and other acts, and, as stated above, the finding of the Court of first instance that both parties exercised possession by letting out small and different portions of the land to different tenants for temporary periods has not been accepted by the Court of Appeal below.

We think, having regard to the definite findings that the plaintiffs were dispossessed by the defendants, and that the defendants have been in possession (by which we think was meant exclusive possession) for a period of 16 years before the suit, the suit must be held to be barred by limitation.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Acceptance—Conditional acceptance—Contract—Clause in indent authorising sale of goods after notice—Reference to arbitration—Arbitrator's jurisdiction to decide questions of law and fact on which his jurisdiction depends—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899) Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 33—Contingent contract—Uncertain future event.

An importer of piece-goods accepted an order "subject to revision and confirmation by mail if required." It was established by evidence regarding the ordinary course of business that the words "if required" in the said condition meant "if required by some telegraphic mistake between England and India for which neither of the contracting parties was responsible": no such mistake occurred:

Held, that there was a complete and binding contract.

First Appeal No. 438 of 1917, decided on December 2, 1920, distinguished.

Per Piggott, J.—A special clause in an indent, which provides that, in the event of buyer's failure to accept the seller's draft and to pay it at maturity, the importer can sell the goods by public auction, after due notice, and claim the difference between the selling price and the contract price, does not bar a reference to arbitration until goods are sold by public auction after notice.

An arbitrator can interpret such a clause and decide that its non-compliance does not bar a claim for damages.

Per Walsh, J.—The decision of the question whether there has been a completed contract so as to bind the parties to submission in writing, does not rest with arbitrators. Questions of fact and law, upon which the jurisdiction of arbitrators depends, are for the Courts. A SASHIL CHANDRA DAS v. SAKHAMAL BANSIDHAR, 20 A. L. J. 377; 4 U. P. L. R. Adverse possession as between co-sharers—Joint property—Rights of co-tenants—Possession of one co-tenant, when, adverse to others.

In order to establish adverse possession as between co-sharers, there must be evidence of an open assertion of a hostile title by one of them to the knowledge of the others; mere non-participation in the profits by one party and exclusive occupation by the other is not conclusive.

If possession may either be lawful or unlawful, in the absence of evidence, it must be assumed to be the former.

Possession is never considered adverse, if it can be referred to a lawful title.

Every co-tenant has the right to enter into and occupy the common property and every part thereof, provided that in so doing he does not exclude his fellow tenants or otherwise deny to them some right to which they are entitled as co-tenants; and they on their part may safely assume, until something occurs of which they must take notice and which indicates the contrary, that the possession taken and held by him is held as a co-tenant; and is in law the possession of all the co-tenants, and not adverse to any of them.

But one co-tenant may oust the others and set up an exclusive right of ownership in himself, and an open, notorious and hostile possession of this character for the statutory period will ripen into title as against the co-tenants who were ousted.

In order to render the possession of one co-tenant adverse to the others, not only must the occupancy be under an exclusive claim of ownership, in denial of the rights of the other co-tenants, but such occupancy must have been made known to the other co-tenants, either by express notice or by such open and notorious acts as must have brought home to the other co-tenants' knowledge of the denial of their rights.

No comprehensive formula can be framed to test whether the possession of a co-tenant in a particular case is adverse to the other co-tenants. But the evidence to show adverse possession by one co-tenant must be much clearer than between strangers to the title, and the hostile intent of the co-tenant in possession must be shown by unequivocal conduct. *C. Agency, contract of—Custom turning agent into principal outrageous—Right of re-sale—Re-sale, when breach of contract.

The vendor's right of re-sale does not arise until the date fixed by the contract has expired. If the property has undoubtedly passed and the real date for paying the balance of purchase-money and for delivery of the article has not arrived the re-sale is a breach of contract entitling the vendee to repudiate the transaction.

The suggestion that an agent, being a medium of communication between two parties, without the consent of his principal or without a term in his contract authorising him to do so, which is the same thing, can turn himself into a principal and use his principal's money and the advantages which he has obtained from his position as agent, to make a profit for himself, is unheard of and outrageous. s. 164 (2)—Profits, suit for—Negligence of lambardar neither alleged nor proved—Decree, whether to be based on gross rental or actual collection—Mixed question of law and fact—Negligence—Presumption—Proof.

In a suit for profits brought by a co-sharer against a lambardar, if no negligence is alleged or proved against the lambardar within the meaning of section 164.2 of the Agra Tenancy Act, a decree can be given on the actual collection and not on the gross rental.

The question whether the lower Court was right in giving a decree on the basis of gross rental is a mixed question of law and fact.

The fact that a large portion of the demand for a certain year remained uncollected does not necessarily lead to the inference that the balance would not be recovered in subsequent years and that the deficit in that particular year was due to the negligence of the Lambardar. Evidence must be given before such an inference can be drawn. A JODHI RAM v. KAUNSILLA, 20 A. L. J. 318; 4 U. P. L. R. (A.) 160 521

Alluvial accretions—Title—"Gradual, slow and imperceptible," meaning of—English rule.

The recognition of title by alluvial accretion is largely governed by the fact that the latter is due to the normal action of physical forces and the different conditions of Indian and English rivers are such that what would be abnormal and almost miraculous in the latter is normal and commonplace in the former.

Even if the test of "gradual, slow and imperceptible" according to the English rule is applied to such accretions, it should be borne in mind that slow and imperceptible are only qualifications of the word 'gradual' and this word with its qualifications only defines a test relative to the conditions to which it is applied. P C SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. Appeal, Civil—Appellate Court, whether can take cognizance of facts since institution of suit—Suit for declaration—Dispossession of plaintiff during pendency of suit—Possession, decree for.

An Appellate Court can take cognizance of matters which may have happened after the institution of the suit for the purpose of moulding the relief that a party is entitled to, provided it is not based on a new title which accrued after the action.

Plaintiff, who was in possession of a certain house, brought a suit for a declaration of his title in respect of it. During the pendency of the matter in the Appellate Court, the plaintiff was formally ousted from possession of two-thirds of the house under an order of a Court passed in certain partition proceedings. The Appellate Court, after the neces-

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 cl. (ix), Sch. I, Art. 1—'Suit,' whether excludes "appeal"—Mortgage—Foreclosure and redemption suits—Court-fee payable on memorandum of appeal.

Court-fees are payable not on suits or on appeals but on documents which are filed, exhibited or recorded in Courts in accordance with section 8 of the Court Fees Act.

The provisions of section 7 of the Court Fees Act are applicable equally to appeals as to original suits and the word 'suit' in section 7 of the Act is not used in contradistinction to the word 'appeal.'

A reference to section 17 of the Court Fees Act shows that the word "suit" is not used in the Act in contradistinction to "appeal."

It does not, however, follow from this view of the law that where plaints are chargeable under clause (ix) of section 7 read with Art. 1 of the First Schedule of the Court Fees Act the memoranda of appeal filed against decrees passed in such suits are invariably chargeable in the same manner.

A suit may change its nature in appeal and though the original suit may be for redemption or foreclosure there may be no question raised in appeal as to the right to redeem or foreclose and the appeal may be merely in respect of the amount which the Court of first instance has held to be payable. In such a case the suit in appeal would clearly not be a suit falling within the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 and the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute would not be computed in accordance with the provisions of that clause but would be a specified sum, the Court-fee payable on which would be ad valorem in accordance with the provisions of Art. 1 of Schedule I of the Act.

If a suit for redemption or foreclosure is dismissed, the Court-fee payable by the plaintiff-appellant on his memorandum of appeal ought to be computed in accordance with the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act, that is, according to the principal money expressed to be secured by the instrument of mortgage.

If a suit to redeem is decreed and the defendant-appellant merely challenges the right to redeem, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal ought also to be computed in accordance with the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 of the Court Fees Act.

If a suit to redeem or foreclose is decreed and the plaintiff or the defendant in appeal merely challenges the amount to be paid or received without questioning the right to redeem or foreclose, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal will be on the subject-matter in dispute, that is, on the additional amount claimed or the amount in respect of which the appellant seeks to avoid liability.

Appeal, Civil—contd.

Where in a foreclosure suit a decree is passed for a certain sum in default of payment of which within a fixed time the property shall be foreclosed and the defendant in appeal denies the plaintiff's right to foreclose on the ground that he is not liable to pay any portion of the sum decreed, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal ought to be calculated ad valorem on the subject-matter in dispute according to Art. 1 of Schedule I, that is, on the amount of the decree the payment of which the defendant by his appeal seeks to avoid.

Where a decree is passed for redemption on payment of a certain sum and in appeal the defendant not only denies the plaintiff's right to redeem but in the alternative claims that if he be entitled to redeem he can do so only on payment of a larger sum than that fixed by the Court of first instance, the Court-fee ought to be paid on the relief which is liable to pay the higher fee; on the former the fee would be computed in accordance with the provisions of clause (ix) of section 7 read with Art. 1 of Schedule I and on the latter the Court-fee would be ad valorem on the difference between the amount found due by the lower court and that claimed by the appellant. O. The plaint in a suit for possession of land, assessed to fluctuating land revenue was rejected on 14 January 1917 on the ground that the plaintiff, who had paid Court-fee on ten times the land revenue, failed to pay Court-fee on the market value of the land within the period allowed by the Court. An appeal against the order of rejection was preferred on 21st March 1917 on a stamp of Rs. 2. The memorandum of appeal was returned as insufficiently stamped but it was re-filed without making good the deficiency. On 7th June 1917 Court-fee was paid on ten times the land revenue and at the hearing the appellant's poverty and ignorance of law were invoked as grounds of failure to make up the deficiency:

Appeal, Civil—conold.

Held, (1) that no valid memorandum of appeal was presented within the period of limitation prescribed for the appeal inasmuch as the appellant had not paid Court-fee even on ten times the land revenue which was his own valuation of his claim;

(2) that the pleas of poverty and ignorance of law were not well-founded as it was the appellant's duty to pay the fee at least on the valuation which he had himself placed upon his claim.

An order rejecting a plaint for non-payment of deficient Court-fee, amounts to a decree, and a memorandum of appeal from such order must bear an ad valorem stamp. L. SHAHU v. BAKRI, 3 L. L. J. 237

(IX of 1847), s. 6—Land revenue, assessment of—Churs and islands formed in rivers after Permanent Settlement—Bengal Land Revenue Assessment (Resumed Lands) Regulation (II of 1819), ss. 3, 31.

All churs and islands in rivers flowing through, or opposite to, lands belonging to the zemindaris in Bengal which have been formed since the Decennial Settlements made permanent by Regulation I of 1793 are liable to assessment under the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Act.

The intention and effect of Act IX of 1847 was merely to alter the machinery by which lands gained from the sea or rivers by alluvion or dereliction were to be assessed, and not to subject to assessment any lands which would not have been liable thereto under the law in force at the time when the Act was passed and, accordingly, a question raised as to the assessability of churs must be determined by reference to the pre-existing law and particularly to Regulation II of 1819.

The effect of Regulation II of 1819 is to declare that all churs newly formed since the Decennial Settlement, though upon a river-bed which is recognised as the property of the owner of an estate, are to be treated as land gained since the Settlement and consequently unsettled at the time. This express provision cannot be excluded merely by showing that the river-bed from which the churs have been thrown up was, at the date of Settlement, the property of the zemindar and that the Settlement was imposed upon the zemindari as a whole. The ownership of the bed may determine the proprietary rights in the churs; but property is one thing and assessability is another. The Regulation declares in terms that new churs are to be included in the category of unsettled lands, and contains no exception for churs formed upon a river-bed belonging to a settled estate.

The express provisions in section 31 of the same Regulation (II of 1819) that waste land shall not be the subject of an additional assessment when brought into cultivation, when contrasted with the provisions of section 3 of the same Regulation as to newly formed churs and islands, affords further support to the view that the Legislature intended to put such churs upon a different footing from the waste lands and to make them liable to assessment.

—s. 4, interpretation and application of—

River-bed property of landlord—Accretion—Landlord and tenant, rights of.

Held, by the Full Bench:—Clause 1 of section 4 of Bengal Regulation XI of 1825 applies whether the river, out of the bed of which accretions have been formed, is the private property of an individual or the property of the Crown.

Per Dawson Miller, C. J.—The section applies in all cases where the tenant claims, as an increment to his tenure, lands gained by gradual accession from the recess of the river, the property of his landlord, and, except in the case of a claim by the superior landlord, the section is not confined to lands which are the property of the State.

Clause of section 4 applies both to the case of a superior landlord, who holds from the Crown, and to the case of the holder of a subordinate estate or tenure holding from a landlord intermediate between himself and the Crown, and to be limited in each case to accretions from the lands of the person from whom he holds and to whom revenue in the one case and rent in the other is payable. In the case of a superior landlord the person from whom he holds is the Crown and no one else. In such a case it is only where the Crown is the proprietor of the accreted lands that the section comes into operation. To permit a landlord to acquire in this manner a proprietary right in the land of his neighbour with whom he has no relationship such as that of a tenant to his landlord, would be going outside the scope and intention of the section and permitting what, in effect, would be confiscation of another man's land. This consideration, however, does not apply where the claim is by a tenant against the land of his landlord, a claim which by the proviso to the first clause of the section is limited to a right of property similar to that possessed by the tenant in the tenure to which the land may become annexed and which, by the same proviso, carries with it the liability to pay an increase of rent.

Per Mullick, J. The Regulation does not provide for islands in a large and navigable river the bed of which is the property of an individual or those in a small and shallow river the bed of which is not the property of an individual.

As for proprietary rights in accretions, clause 4 read with clause 1 provides for a small and shallow river the bed of which belongs to an individual, and clause 1 for a large and navigable river the bed of which does not belong to an individual. There is no provision for a large and navigable river of which the bed is private property.

With regard to the rights of tenure-holders and raiyyats, clause 1 deals with rivers of all classes and is subject to no words of limitation or restriction. Therefore, an accretion thrown up along the frontage of a raiyyati holding on the bank of any river the bed of which belongs to his landlord would be an increase to the holding and would be held as such.

The Regulation is not exhaustive. It is subject to the rules of equity and justice.

In India the presumption is that the bed of a large and navigable river belongs to Government, which occupies here a position which is fundamentally different to that which it occupies in England. Here Government is the owner of the soil of the country and has all the rights of a proprietor. The bed of a navigable river is not the public domain in the same full sense as in a country where all land which is not private property vests in the public and is held by Government as a mere trustee. If in these circumstances it is not inequitable to give the adjacent proprietor and raiyyat land which has accreted out of the river-bed and is the property of another, why should it be inequitable to give a raiyyat an interest in a river-bed belonging to his landlord which has accreted to his holding and for which he will pay rent? In both class of rivers the proprietor will pay Government revenue for the accretion, and compensate himself by taking rent from his tenants. There is no question of any confiscation or taking away.

The ordinary rule of conveyancing is that a grant or lease of land abutting on a river by a person who is in a position to part with the soil is presumed to pass half the adjacent bed of the river without any reference to the instrument of grant; even where there is no grant the lessee or tenant is entitled to claim the benefit of the presumption. In the absence of contract or proof of a re-formation in situ, an occupancy raiyyat in India would also be entitled to claim the benefit of this presumption.

Per Jwala Prasad, J—Clause 1 of section 4 is a general one and applies to all kinds of rivers, and lays down the principle upon which the rights to the lands thus gained should be determined.

Though the primary object of the Regulation was to provide rules for determining disputes between the riparian proprietors, yet it has, as a matter of fact, dealt with the rights not only of proprietors but also of subordinate tenures. In fact, the Regulation seems to deal with disputes of all kinds, as is expressly declared by clause fifth of section 4. It applies not only to disputes between the riparian proprietors but also to cases where no riparian proprietor is concerned and the dispute is between the proprietor and his tenant on the same side of the river. Pat KHUBI MAHTON v. LACHMI DAS, 3 P. L. T. 513. 642

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884), s. 101, proviso—"Machinery," meaning of—"Water Reservoir and its supporting structure, whether 'machinery'".

The word "machinery" in the proviso to section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act when used in ordinary language, prima facie, means some mechanical contrivances which by themselves or in combination with one or more other mechanical contrivances by the combined movement and interdependent operation of their respective parts generate power or evoke, modify, apply or direct natural forces with the object in each case of effecting so definite and specific a result.

But the determination in a given case of what is or is not "machinery" must to a large extent depend upon the special facts of the case.

A balancing tank into which water is pumped for distribution in the water mains of a Municipality together with the supporting structure of such tank is not 'machinery'. P. C. A tenant who is found to have been in khas possession of the culturable portion of a holding by cultivating the same through labourers and is also found to have taken a lease of the land and built his bari on a part of it about 40 years ago, is a khudkast raiyyat within the meaning of section 11 of the Regulation. KRISHNA PRAMADA DAS v. — ss. 7, 52, 105—Claim for excess rent for excess area—Question of enhancement of rent, if can be taken up.

Where in Settlement proceedings under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a landlord applies for excess rent for excess area as also for enhancement of rent but abandons his claim to the latter claim and the question of the enhancement of rent is not gone into and only a decree for excess rent for excess area is passed, it is not open to the Special Judge on appeal to decree an enhancement of rent on the principles of section 7 of the Act. LTD. 1001

— s. 29—"Specially," meaning of—Applicability of section.

The word "specially," as used in section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, has no reference to the quantum of the reduction of rent allowed for the consideration there mentioned, but merely requires that owing to special circumstances, viz., the agreement to cultivate a particular crop, the rent is lower than it otherwise would have been. Mere proof that the rent was a low rent would not be sufficient to comply with the section unless it were also proved that the low rate was arrived at in consideration of cultivating a particular crop. But once it is proved that this is the case, then the actual amount whereby the rent is reduced below what it otherwise would have been if no such obligation had existed is not a matter to be taken into consideration in deciding whether the proviso has been complied with.

Section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to an increase in the amount of rent by reason of an increase in the area, it applies only to an increase in the rate of rent. PAT GRANT, W. M. v. EKLAL JHA, 3 P. L. T. 386 49

— s. 50 (1), (2), applicability of—"Permanent settlement," meaning of—Presumption under s. 50 (2).

To gain the advantage of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it must be shown that the rate of rent has not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement of 1793.

The words "Permanent Settlement" in section 50 (1) and (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act refer to the Permanent Settlement of 1793, and not to any other Settlement when the land itself was permanently settled.

Even if a case does not come within section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the fact that uniform rent has been paid for a period of 20 years, may create a presumption in favour of the tenure-holder that the rate of his rent has not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement of 1793. C OSMAN MANDAL v. Bengal Tenancy Act—contd.

To entitle a tenant to the benefit of the presumption under sub-section (2) of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the tenant is not required to establish actual payment of rent during the twenty years at a uniform rate; he has to establish that he and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the suit or proceeding; for a person may hold as a tenant, even though he does not actually pay the rent agreed upon to his landlord.

It has not been, and, cannot be, maintained that the omission to pay on behalf of the tenant or refusal to receive rent on the part of the landlord causes a cessation of the tenancy.

A tenant paid rent at a certain rate which was uniform from 1845 to 1897, since when there was no actual payment of rent: the landlord attempted to enhance the rent but the tenant did not accede to the demand and no proceeding was instituted in Court for alteration of the rent. In 1915 the tenant was recorded in the Record of Rights as an occupancy raiyat, whereupon the landlord instituted the present proceeding for enhancement of rent on the ground that the prevailing rent was higher than that paid by the tenant:

Held, that as the rent which was in operation in 1897 was in operation from 1897 to 1915, in other words, as the rent at which the tenant had held during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the proceeding had been at a uniform rate, he was entitled to the presumption mentioned in sub-section (2) of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C MOHINI KANTA SAHA v. Where a person purchases a tenancy, executes a kabuliyat in respect of it, which simply mentions the fact of the purchase, and prays that his name may be entered in the landlord's register in place of the last tenant, it does not amount to the creation of a new tenancy but is a mere recognition of the original tenancy, as held by the transferor. C JOY CHANDRA CHAKRABURTTY v. Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Distinction between judgments in rem and in personam, their scope and effect discussed.

Per Wallis, C. J.—The effect of section 11 read with section 4, Civil Procedure Code, is to preclude the Court from refusing to try a suit or issue which was not between the same parties but between one of such parties and a third person.

Per Kumarami Sastri, J.—In cases where there is no bar under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, the Court has to try the issue and if the judgment in the prior suit is filed for the purpose of proving the plaintiff's claim or for the purpose of proving the defence to the action, it is only relevant as a piece of evidence, the probative value of which is regulated by the provisions of the Evidence Act.

It is not permissible to travel outside the provision of section 11, Civil Procedure Code, and apply the rule of res judicata to cases falling outside the limitation imposed by the section.

Where a judgment in personam is pleaded, its legal effect and probative force will depend on the facts of each case:

J.* and Krishnan, J.)—In the absence of evidence to the contrary or a special usage, succession to a hereditary office which cannot be enjoyed by several heirs in common, is by lineal primogeniture. M. S. 11—Res judicata—Compromise decree—Co-defendants—Decree in partition suit.

A compromise decree operates as res judicata unless it is tainted with fraud or was procured by undue influence.

A decision as between co-defendants cannot be res judicata unless it was necessary to decide an issue between the co-defendants in order to grant relief to the plaintiff.

In a suit for partition, where the rights of different persons have to be determined, and have been so determined, the decision might operate as res judicata, although the plaintiff in the subsequent suit may have been a defendant in the previous suit, but if the plaintiff in the subsequent suit was only one of the several defendants in the previous suit, had no defence to the claim for partition, was not at all concerned with the share which was claimed by the plaintiff in that suit, was made a defendant simply because he was a co-sharer, and the decision in the suit did not affect any question of partition of shares between him and the plaintiff in that suit, a decision between the plaintiff and other defendants in that suit would not have the effect of res judicata as between that defendant and his co-defendants. A. S. 11—Res judicata—Doctrine not to be unduly conditioned.

Although the doctrine laid down in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code relating to res judicata may be rightly applied in certain proceedings in execution arising out of the same judgment so as to put an end to litigation and may possibly be applied in certain cases where separate suits have been brought, raising points which have already been decided in execution cases fought between the same parties, still, the special rules laid down in the explanations to that section which go behind the ordinary doctrine of res judicata, ought not to be applied generally in execution cases.

A point which is taken before the Trial Court but is not taken before the lower Appellate Court must be considered to have been abandoned and cannot be raised in second appeal. PAT PRITHI MAHTON v. JAMSHAD KHAN, 3 P. L. T. 40; 656

SS. 11, Exp. IV, 47—Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), s. 50—Sale of proprietary rights to occupancy tenants—Sale set aside—Possession awarded to proprietor—Suit by tenants to establish occupancy rights, whether barred—Res judicata—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

Plaintiffs were occupancy tenants of certain land of which N. was the proprietor. N. sold the proprietary rights to the plaintiffs and died some time after the alienation. Defendant who succeeded N. brought a suit to impugn the sale on the ground that it had been effected without consideration and necessity and was awarded a decree for possession of the land. In execution of that decree defendant obtained actual possession of the land and turned the plaintiffs out. The latter objected that they were entitled to retain possession of the land as occupancy tenants, but their objection was disallowed. Upon this they sued for restoration of their occupancy rights:

Held, 1 that section 50 of the Punjab Tenancy Act was not applicable to the case inasmuch as the plaintiffs had been dispossessed in execution of a decree;

(2) that the suit was not barred by the provisions of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code;

A man may carry on business either personally or through an agent, and although the manager of a joint Hindu family is not liable to account to the sleeping partners in precisely the same way as the manager of an ordinary business, his position approximates more nearly to that of an agent than to any other. He acts on behalf of the family and in its interests and it must be held that each individual member of the family carries on business wherever a branch of the family firm is in active existence. He is, therefore, liable to be sued even in a purely personal suit at any of these places just as a partner in an ordinary partnership is liable to be sued wherever a branch of the business exists. L JAMNA DAS v. S. 48—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879)—Decree, mortgage—Instalments—Failure to pay any instalments entitling decree-holder to execute whole decree—Decree made absolute—Starting point for 12 years' limitation—Limitation.

On the 11th September 1900 a decree was passed under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act providing the payment of the decretal amount by ten yearly instalments and also providing that in case of default of the payment of any one instalment the decree-holder was to wait for a year and if the instalment remained still unpaid he was at liberty to recover the whole amount then due. The first instalment fell due in March 1901, and was not paid within a year. Thus the whole decree became payable in March 1902 but the decree-holder applied in December 1903 for a decree absolute and got the order on the 7th January 1904. Some applications were made for execution but the last application was made on the 7th June 1915.

Held, that as the decree was passed under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act there was no necessity to apply to the Court to have the decree made absolute, that the application to have the decree made absolute could only be treated as a step-in-aid of execution, that the order on the application dated the 7th January 1904 could not be treated as a decree to give a fresh starting point for the period of twelve years allowed by section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and that, consequently the application of 1915 was barred by limitation. B. Order not determining rights in controversy in suit—

Leave, grant of.

A, one of three decree-holders, applied for transfer of his third share to another Court in whose jurisdiction the property of the judgment-debtor was situate. The remaining decree-holders were served with notice of the application but raised no objection, and the Court made the desired order. Objection to the order was taken by the judgment-debtor before the Execution Court. The matter went up in appeal to High Court which declared that the transfer must be treated as a transfer of the whole decree and that no sum should be paid out of Court to A, except on his giving security to refund the same if required. Some time after this A started a fresh execution in which B, one of the remaining decree-holders, applied to be added as a party. This was allowed. A revision application against the order was dismissed by the High Court, and leave was sought by A. to appeal to the Privy Council:

Held, that there were no grounds for allowing the application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Per Miller, C. J.—1) that the order sought to be appealed against was not a final order determining the rights of the parties in any matter in controversy in the suit as the rights of the decree-holders as to their shares to claim the benefit of the decree were settled by the decree itself and were further determined by the High Court judgment which declared that the transfer of part of the decree must be treated as a transfer of the whole, that the order related to procedure and was merely a natural corollary of the High Court judgment:

(2) that in view of the clear provisions of O XXI, r. 15 empowering a Court in such a case to protect the interests of all the joint decree-holders, there was no substantial question of law involved

Per Mullick, J.—That in view of the judgment of the High Court declaring that the execution proceedings could only be prosecuted by A on behalf of all the decree-holders, which judgment not being appealed against had become final, it was no longer open to A to contend that B should not have been added as a party to the execution proceedings.

s. 115, O. IX, r. 2—Revision—Remedy, other, open—High Court, interference by—Process-fee paid late—Dismissal of suit—Illegality.

A High Court generally does not entertain an application for revision when there is another remedy open to a petitioner, but there is nothing in the law which prohibits a High Court from interfering where grave injustice may have been done.

The date of hearing of a suit was 21st October. Plaintiff deposited the process-fee on 11th October at Gujrat. The office did not issue a summons to the defendant at Gujranwala on the ground of the process-fee being paid very late and on the date of the hearing the Court dismissed the suit under O. IX, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code:

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Held, (1) that O. IX, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, had no application to the suit inasmuch as process-fee had been deposited by the plaintiff;

(2) that the office acted wrongly in not issuing a summons to the defendant on 11th October;

(3) that the order dismissing the suit must be set aside in revision. L RALLA RAM v. RAJ, 4 L. L. J. 71 945

Although Order XXI, rule 92, Civil Procedure Code, requires that no orders shall be made under rule 89 unless notice of an application to set aside the sale has been given to all persons affected thereby, it is not in every case obligatory on the applicant to pay the process fee or to serve notice according to the mode of service prescribed in the Code.

Restitution can only be granted under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, on the application of a party to the "decree varied or reversed." The applicant must be a party entitled to some benefit by way of restitution. It is not sufficient that he is merely a person entitled to the benefit.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Section 171 of the Civil Procedure Code should not be invoked to cover an order which only sets right one injustice by the infliction of another, or, as it is said, robs Peter in order to pay Paul. The extraordinary powers conferred by this section should not be exercised where the equities are evenly balanced.

A claim petition by a judgment-debtor, under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the property attached in execution of decree against him was trust property, was disallowed under r. 61. The judgment-debtor, however, filed a regular suit and obtained a decree declaring that the property was trust property and that, therefore, it was not liable to be proceeded against. In the meantime, the property was sold at Court auction and the price paid by the auction-purchaser was distributed rateably among several decree-holders, whose decrees were recorded as satisfied.

Upon obtaining the decree declaring that the property was trust property and, therefore, not liable to attachment and sale the judgment-debtor obtained re-delivery of the property under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, and when the auction-purchaser was deprived of the property he claimed back his money from the various decree-holders who had received it rateably. In the meantime, their decrees had become time-barred:

Held, that the auction-purchaser could not invoke to his aid the provisions of

- (1) section 144, Civil Procedure Code, inasmuch as
 - (a) the decree in execution of which the property was sold had not been reversed;
 - (b) the auction purchaser was not a party to the order by which the objection-petition under O. XXI, r. 58, was disallowed under r. 61; nor could he be treated as the legal representative of the judgment-debtor;
 - (c) the order which was subsequently varied by the declaratory decree was the one made upon the claim petition and not an order that was passed on the execution petition for attachment and sale of the property;
 - (d) that the order disallowing the judgment-debtor's objection under O. XXI, r. 61, was not a decree;

- (2) section 151, Civil Procedure Code, because,
 - (a) the refund was asked for from persons who had nothing to do with the auction-sale, but merely profited by it, in the way of rateable distribution under the orders of a Court;
 - (b) the decrees had become time-barred, and if restitution was ordered the decree-holders would be deprived of the fruits of their decrees and this hardship would result to them though no blame attached to them.

XXX, r. 4 (2)—Appellate Court—Respondent, addition of—Suit by or against a firm in the firm-name—Names of partners disclosed—Death of a partner—Legal representative, whether must be added as party—Determination of partnership—Notice—Continuance of partnership—Presumption—Partner carrying on business of same nature without consent of other partners.

Apart from all questions as to the scope of O. XLI, r. 20 and O. XLI, r. 33, the Court, in a proper case, has inherent power to add a respondent to an appeal.

A suit of the description contemplated by O. XXX of the Code of Civil Procedure may be brought by or against a firm in the firm-name even though the firm may have been dissolved before the date of the suit, provided the cause of action arose before the date of dissolution. This may be done, notwithstanding the position that a firm is not recognised as an artificial or juristic person. The proceedings in a suit so brought continue in the name of the firm, even though the names of the partners are disclosed. From this standpoint no valid objection can be taken to the competence of an appeal even if the representatives of a deceased appellant are not added as parties.

Where no fixed term has been agreed upon for the dissolution of a partnership, any partner may determine the partnership at any time on giving notice of his intention so to do to all the other partners. But the dissolution takes place as from the date of communication of the notice.

Where the evidence discloses that a partner who intended to retire from the partnership did in fact continue to associate with its work, a presumption may legitimately be drawn in favour of the continuance of the partnership.

If a partner, without the consent of the other partners, carries on any business of the same nature and competing with that of the firm, he must account for and pay over to the firm all profits made by him in such business, and he must also make compensation to the firm for any loss occasioned thereby. C. O. III, r. 4 (2), s. 151—Plaint returned for presentation to proper Court—Power of Pleader to represent his client, if determined—S. 151, inherent power under, when to be used Under O. III, r. 4 (2), Civil Procedure Code, the appointment of a Pleader is not determined until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client.

Where a plaint is returned for presentation to the proper Court, the original vakalatnama of the plaintiff's Pleader is not determined where the presentation of the plaint before the proper Court can be considered as a continuation of the proceedings in the suit as originally instituted for the purposes of O. III, r. 4 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, as for instance, where the plaint is presented to the proper Court on the same day on which it is returned.

By its very terms section 151, Civil Procedure Code, does, in certain specified circumstances, nullify the clear and imperative provisions of the Code as well as those that are ambiguous or advisory, if any of the latter classes exist. The provisions which cannot be nullified by virtue of the power mentioned in that section are not those that are clear and imperative but only those whose operation in the particular case will not defeat the ends of justice or lead to abuse of the process of the Court.

The power mentioned in section 151, Civil Procedure Code, must be used sparingly, and only in the last resort if only because of the great danger of mistake, as to what the justice of a given case may be. N. DEBILAL v. KRISHNAJI 296

When a Pleader accepts a brief, it is his duty to attend to his client's interest throughout the proceedings in the case unless his appointment be determined with the leave of the Court by a writing signed by him or his client and filed in Court.

In an appeal filed by a Pleader, a notice of the date fixed for hearing was served on him. On that notice, the Pleader made the following entry, "The appellant should be informed, He has his papers with him and has not left his address with me." On the date of hearing no body put in an appearance.

Held, rejecting the appeal, that the appellant must be deemed to have had notice of the date fixed for hearing. O. SHAO LAIQ SINGH v. AUSAN SINGH, 9 O. L. J. 170; 25 O. C. 40. 554

O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of pleadings—Interlocutory order—Revision

Leave to amend should always be given unless the Court is satisfied that the party applying for leave is acting mala fide, or that, by his blunder, he has done some injury to his opponent, which cannot be compensated for by costs or otherwise. However negligent or careless may have been the omission, however late the proposed amendment, the amendment should be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

The High Court should hesitate as a rule to interfere in revision with interlocutory orders of the lower Courts, but it should not hesitate in exceptional cases.

Defendants applied for leave to amend their written statement before issues were struck but the Trial Court refused to grant leave to amend. On an application to the High Court in revision:

Held, that this was an exceptional case in which the High Court would interfere with the interlocutory order of the Trial Court.

An interlocutory order passed by the presiding Judge of a Court is not binding on his successor and the latter can go behind the order if a case is made out for his doing so. L. JHARIA COAL Co. v. DIWAN CHAND & Co. 335

O. VIII, r. 6—Set-off—Counter-claim—Difference—"Money due"—Unascertained damages.

Set-off and counter-claim are governed by rules of procedure which must be construed strictly.

A set-off can be pleaded as a defence and can only arise where the claim to be set-off one against the other whether by plaintiff or defendant exists in the same right. The principle on which an equitable set-off can be allowed is that the claim on which it is based must arise from the same transaction which is the subject-matter of the plaintiff's suit, and it is only when a claim for damages, for instance, forms the subject-matter of a counter-claim that it makes no difference whether damages are based on a claim arising on the subject-matter of the suit or are based on some transaction which is entirely outside the plaintiff's claim.

Though every set-off can be pleaded as a counter-claim, if a defendant so desires, every counter-claim cannot be pleaded as a set-off. It is, therefore, of the greatest importance to keep separate the questions of set-off and counter-claim when a defendant seeks to claim as a set-off not money due but an unascertained sum for damages.

A counter-claim is bad when it cannot form the subject-matter of a separate suit in the Court trying the suit in which it is pleaded.

Where a defendant pleaded a set-off on the basis of an Article of Association, by which the plaintiff was bound and which ran as follows: "The directors may deduct from the dividend or bonus payable to any shareholder all sums of money due from him to the company."

Held, that, as the defendant wanted to set off an unascertained sum for damages, it could not be allowed as it was not money due within the meaning of the above article. B. VITHALDAS GULABDAS v. HYDERABAD SPINNING & WEAVING CO. LTD., 4 Bom. L. R. 348. 326

O. XI, r. 14—Production of documents, non-compliance with order for, effect of.

The mere non-compliance with an order for the production of books and documents in Court, made under Order XI, rule 14 of the Civil Procedure Code, does not warrant the striking off the defence of the party which is guilty of the non-compliance of the order. A YALPUR SUGAR MILLS & Co. v. O. O. XXI, r. 1 (1) (a)—Deposit of decretal amount in Court by judgment-debtor—Notice of payment to decree-holder—Duty of Court.

In all cases of suits, appeals and applications, when decretal amount is deposited in Court by the judgment-debtor, and when this fact is brought to its notice by permission being asked to deposit the money, it is the duty of the Court to give notice to the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor should, however, pay the necessary process fee. But even if he does not pay the Court is bound to inform the decree-holder of the payment when he appears to ask for sale of the property. N NARAYAN v. GANPATRAO 42

O. XXI, rr. 57, 58, 63 Execution of decree—Attachment—Claim proceedings—Execution dismissed—Order in claim proceedings—Title suit—Limitation

Plaintiffs who had obtained a decree against a certain firm attached certain houses in execution of the decree. Objections to the attachment of one of these houses were filed under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code. Some evidence was taken in support of the objection and proceedings were then adjourned, to 14th February 1914 for further evidence. In the meantime the decree was partially satisfied and at the request of the decree-holders the Court dismissed the execution proceedings on 9th February 1914. On 18th February the decree-holders being absent, the Court passed an order accepting the objection and removing the attachment. In April 1915 the plaintiffs again attached the same house in execution of the same decree. The defendants again objected and their objection was allowed on 27th August 1915. On 2nd October 1915 plaintiffs brought a regular suit for a declaration that the house belonged to the judgment-debtor. The lower Courts dismissed the suit as time-barred on the ground that it had been brought more than one year from the order of 14th February 1914.

Held, (1) that the effect of the order of 9th February 1914, dismissing the execution proceedings, was, under O. XXI, r. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code, to remove the attachment;

(2) that after the order of 9th February 1914 the Court had become functus officio and that, therefore, the order of 18th February 1914, was a nullity and was not binding on the plaintiffs;

(3) that the plaintiffs' cause of action arose on 27th August 1915 and that their suit was, therefore, within time. L FIRM FATEH DIN ALLAH DITTA v. QUTAB DIN, 3 L. J. 543

O. XXI, r. 58, ss. 47, 151—Objection application headed under ss. 47, 151—Appeal

An objection by the judgment-debtor that the property, against which the decree-holder has filed an application to execute his decree, is wagf property, is an objection under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code, even if the objection petition is headed as an application under sections 47, 151, Civil Procedure Code, and an order allowing such objection petition is not appealable. PAT NAZIR HUSSAIN v. O. XXI, r. 63—Suit by unsuccessful claimant to establish right to attached property—Burden of proof.

Where a member of a firm knowing that the firm had failed, executed deeds transferring his property to his wife and his son, the Court would be justified in applying the principles of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, and presuming that the alienations were fraudulent, and were executed with the object of delaying and defeating his creditors. L AI BAI v. O. XXI, rr. 66, 90—Execution of decree—Sale—Failure to state estimated price in proclamation—Irregularity—Substantial injury—Second appeal—Point taken for first time.

The mere omission to state in a sale proclamation the estimated price of the property to be sold does not amount to material irregularity within the meaning of r. 90 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code.

A material irregularity in the publication or conduct of a sale would not justify the setting aside of the sale in the absence of proof that substantial injury to the applicant had resulted therefrom.

A point taken for the first time, in second appeal, deserves no consideration. L MUHAMMAD NIZAM-UD-DIN v. AMIN-UD-DIN 885

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

O. XXI, r. 72—Decree-holder purchasing property without permission—Purchase, whether void.

A purchase by a decree-holder who has not obtained permission to bid at an execution sale is neither void nor a nullity but is only to be avoided on the application of the judgment-debtor or some other person interested. The sale would be set aside if the property has not been realised to the best advantage. The conduct of a decree-holder or the fact that he had applied for permission to bid and been refused would not make much difference, for although that would be a fact which the Court might take into consideration in determining whether the sale should be avoided or not, even then it is doubtful whether it would be of any importance, as the question would not be whether the decree-holder had been contumacious, but whether the property had been really realised to the best advantage.

O. XXI, r. 84—Execution of decrees—Sale—Failure to deposit 25 per cent. of purchase-money—Irregularity.

The failure by an auction-purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree to deposit 5 per cent. of the purchase-money at the time of the sale, as required by r. 84, O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code, is a mere irregularity which does not affect the validity of the sale unless it can be shown that substantial injury is thereby caused to the judgment-debtor. L INAIT ULLAH v. PUNJAB NATIONAL BANK LTD., LYALLPUR 427

O. XXI, r. 89—Tender of money with application to set aside sale—Tender, whether application—Limitation Act (IX of 1905), s. 4, applicability of.

The terms of section 4 of the Limitation Act are wide enough to cover an application of every kind, which a man is called upon to make in Court.

A tender of money made with an application under O. XXI, r. 89, for the setting aside of a sale is in itself an application offering to pay the money and is, therefore, governed by section 4 of the Limitation Act. A DURG PRASAD v. BABU LAL, 20 A. L. J. 543, 4 U. P. L. R. A. 117 321

O. XXI, r. 90—Execution of decrees—Sale not proclaimed by beat of drum—Paucity of bidders—Irregularity.

Where owing to the failure of the decree-holder to deposit the necessary charges, an execution sale is not properly announced and the omission results in a paucity of bidders, the irregularity must be taken to have caused substantial injury to the judgment-debtor and the sale will be set aside on that ground. L NAND LAL v. O. XXI, r. 91—Execution of decrees—Sale—Purchase-money, refund of, when can be obtained.

Where after a sale in execution of a decree, the auction-purchaser discovers that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold, he must get the sale set aside under O. XXI, r. 91 of the Civil Procedure Code, before he can obtain the right

When one of two or more defendants dies and no application is made under Order XXII, rule 4 (3), the suit abates as against the deceased defendant. The question, whether the suit abates as a whole, would depend upon whether the suit can be proved in the absence of the legal representatives of the deceased defendant. If the latter had no joint interest with the other defendants and the interests of the several defendants can be discriminated, the abatement of the suit with respect to the deceased defendant will not result in the dismissal of the entire suit. C SARAT KAMINI DAS v. O. XXII, rr. 4, 9—Appeal—Death of respondent—Abatement—Application to set aside abatement—Sufficient cause—Ignorance of death.

An application, purporting to be made under O. XXII, r. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, which is made after expiry of the period for making it, may be treated as having been made under r. 9 of the Order.

Mere ignorance of the death of a party is not a sufficient excuse to entitle an applicant to the benefit of r. 9 of O. XXII, Civil Procedure Code. CHUNI LAL v. KALA KARAN, 4 U. P. L. J. 171 596

O. XXII, r. 9 (2) (3)—Abatement, when set aside.

An abatement ought not to be set aside as a matter of course or lightly. The plaintiff must satisfy the Court that he had a sufficient cause for not applying in time to set aside the abatement and bring a legal representative of the deceased defendant on the record. SARAT CHANDRA SARKAR v. O. XXIII, r. 1—Permission to file suit, whether must be express—Order granting permission, whether can be questioned after it has become final—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1883), s. 55, proceedings under—O. XXIII, r. 1, application of.

Under O. XXIII, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code it is not necessary that the permission mentioned therein should be given in express terms, it is sufficient if the grant of permission can be implied from the order, read with the application on which it was made.

The propriety of an order under O. XXIII, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code, granting permission to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit cannot be questioned after the order has become final.

Plaintiffs applied for Probate of a will, but subsequently asked for permission to withdraw the application saying that they intended to file a regular suit on the basis of the Will. The Court passed an order permitting the withdrawal and dismissed the application. On the filing of the regular suit objection was taken under O XXIII, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that O XXIII, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code was not applicable to Probate proceedings; that even if it were held to be applicable, the order passed by the Court permitting the withdrawal must be read with the application on which it was passed and must be construed as giving permission to the plaintiffs to file the suit. L BANWARI LAL v. KISHEN DEVI, 2 L. L. J. 242 1002

O. XXIII, r. 3—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 2—Suit on pro-note against agriculturist—Admission by defendant—Court, jurisdiction of, to inquire into nature of admission.

Where, in a suit to recover upon a promissory note against an agriculturist, to whom the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act apply, the defendant admits the whole of the plaintiff's claim and asks the Court to pass a decree in accordance with such admission, r. 3 of O. XXIII, of the Civil Procedure Code does not oust the Court of its jurisdiction from going behind the transaction and inquiring into the nature of the admission so as to satisfy itself whether the admission is true and made by the debtor with a full knowledge of his legal rights as against the creditor.

Per Shah, J.—The provisions of O. XXIII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code, wherever they are applicable, must be given effect to even in cases which are governed by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. B. GOTURAM RADHAKISAN v. BANKU DODRU, 24 Bom. L. R. 5; 46 B. 561 253

O. XXXIV, application of Mortgage suit —Preliminary instalment decree by consent of parties—Decree ordering foreclosure on default—Final decree, whether to be obtained before proceeding to execution—Time or payment, enlargement of

When a preliminary decree for payment by instalments, whether extending over more than six months or not, is passed, by consent in a mortgage suit ordering foreclosure on default, the plaintiff is not only entitled but is bound to apply for a final decree before proceeding to execution and a Court has the same powers in regard to enlarging a time for payment allowed by such a decree as it has with any other mortgage-decree.

The mere fact that a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit makes the sum due payable by instalments and not in a lump sum, to be paid on a specified day, does not take it out of the provisions of O. XXXV of the Civil Procedure Code. N. NARAYAN v. DAUDAT 273

O. XXXIV, rr. 5 (2), 8 (4), O. IX, r. 13, O. XVII, r. 3 Application for final decree—Notice to defendant whether necessary—Discretion of Court—Enlargement of time.
Under the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, the proceedings in a mortgage suit between the preliminary and the final decree are a part of the trial of the suit itself, which does not end till the final decree is passed.

When plaintiff in a mortgage suit makes an application under O. XXXV, r. 5 or 4, Civil Procedure Code, for a final decree, it is not legally necessary that notice of the application should be served on the defendant or even issued to him before the final decree is passed, and although it is just and proper to give notice to the defendant, yet the passing of a final decree without notice to the defendant is not an illegality or even an irregularity which would affect the decree in any way, nor is the Court bound by O. IX, r. 3, to set aside such a decree though it may do so if it considers that the absence of notice constitutes "sufficient cause" for the absence of the defendant within the meaning of that rule in that particular case.

Under r. 3, O. XVII, of the Civil Procedure Code it is discretionary with the Court to pass a final decree in a mortgage suit when the defendant fails to comply with the terms of the preliminary decree, but by O. XXXIV, r. 3 (2) and 5 (2), this discretion is taken away when the plaintiff applies for a final decree which the Court is bound to pass unless the defendant appears and shows good cause for an enlargement of time. N. O. XXXIX, r. 2—Temporary injunction, nature of.

An injunction under r. 2 of O. XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code whether it is one restraining a party from altering the position of affairs or directing it to restore the conditions which prevailed at the time the cause of action arose, must not go further and must not create totally new state of things.

Whether or no an injunction in mandatory form or a "true" injunction in mandatory form is within the scope of O. XXXIX, it never is if it creates a totally new set of conditions. L. AHORE ELECTRIC SUPPLY CO., LTD., v. BOMBAY MOTOR AND CYCLE CO., LAHORE 742

O. XLI, r. 1—Receiver—Jurisdiction to appoint—Declaratory suit—Power of Court to remove a party from possession.

Where a Single Judge of the High Court finds that a case is a fit one for the appointment of a Receiver, a Division Bench of the High Court will not interfere with the Single Judge's discretion, unless it is satisfied that the discretion has been improperly exercised and contravenes any principles of law.

A Court has a right to proceed under O. XL, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, where it appears to be just and convenient to do so.

A Court is not debarred from appointing a Receiver of property, forming the subject-matter of a declaratory suit, in which possession of the property is not to be awarded to one party or the other, as the object of the appointment of the Receiver is, to protect the property and to maintain the status quo ante pending the disposal of dispute between the parties; nor is a Court debarred under O. XL, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, from removing one of the parties from the possession of the property. L. AMARNATH v. TEHAJI KAUER, 4 U.P.L.R. 7 383

O. XLI, r. 10—Order rejecting appeal for failure to furnish security for costs, if appealable—Pauper appeals—Application of O. XLI, r. 10 to such appeals.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

No appeal is competent from an order, under r. 10 of O. XLI, Civil Procedure Code, rejecting an appeal for failure to furnish security for costs.

O. XLI, r. 10 is, however, not applicable to pauper appeals and an Appellate court exercising powers under the rule in case of pauper appeals acts illegally and with material irregularity. L. NAZIM v. ABDUL HAMID, 3 L. 30; 4 U. B. L. R. (L.) 67; 88 I. L. R. 1922 236

O. XLI, r. 10—Security for costs, appeal dismissed for failure to furnish—Court, power of, to extend time for furnishing security.

Where an appeal has been rejected on account of the appellants' failure to furnish security for costs within the time allowed by the Court, it is not open to the court rejecting the appeal to extend the time for giving security. The appeal having been finally disposed of, no extension of time can be granted for doing any act relating to the appeal. HARI BHABINI DEBI v. NARENDRA NATH ROY 883

O. XLI, r. 25, order under, if interlocutory—Interference by High Court, is competent

It is only in very exceptional cases that the High Court should exercise its revisional powers of interference with interlocutory orders. An order under O. XLI, r. 25, Civil Procedure Code, is not, strictly speaking, an interlocutory order but it should be interfered with only in exceptional cases, as it is not a final order. Where, however, the order is unnecessary, it should be interfered with. L. ALLAH BAKSH v. LAL KHAN, 2 L. L. J. 642 269

The power vested by r. 27 of O. Sch. II, cl. 3, O. XXIII, r. 3—Arbitration—Reference through Court—Reference cancelled by parties—Arbitrator appointed out of Court—Application to file award as adjustment—Suit on award—Fresh reference to arbitration, effect of, on earlier arbitration proceedings.

In a suit for dissolution of partnership, an order was passed under clause 3 of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, referring the matters in dispute to two arbitrators. Later, the parties informed the Court that they had cancelled this reference and had privately appointed T. alone as the sole arbitrator. T. delivered his award on 14th April 1919. On 5th August 1919 plaintiff applied to file the award as an adjustment under O. XXIII, r. 3, of the Code. On the 14th March 1920 the parties, alleging that contentions had been raised against the award by some of the defendants, applied for the appointment of T. as arbitrator through the Court. The Court appointed T. as arbitrator who was to submit the award before the 15th April 1920. T. was unable to submit his award by that date so that the arbitration proceedings fell to the ground. On 7th November 1920 plaintiff sought to continue his application under O. XXIII, r. 3:

Held, that upon a proper construction of the application of 14th March 1920, and the order thereon, the previous arbitration proceedings were considered as at an end, as the parties had agreed to a fresh arbitration of a character different to the previous arbitration, although the arbitrator was the same; that the parties were relegated to their original position that, therefore, the application in question could no longer be entertained and that the suit must continue. B. Sch. II, clis. 5, 17—Reference to arbitration without intervention of Court—Refusal of an arbitrator to act—Right to obtain order of reference from Court—Fresh arbitrator, appointment of

Where a party goes to arbitration in a case in which if it had refused to do so, an order of reference would have been made under paragraph 17, Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code, he cannot dispute the right of the other party to obtain from the Court an order of reference under that provision of the Code when a difficulty arises at a later stage of the proceedings which has not been provided for by the parties, as, for instance, where one of the arbitrators refuses to act. In such a case the Court is competent to appoint under paragraph 5 a fresh arbitrator in place of the one who has declined to act. A FAZAL ILAHI v. PRAG NARAIN, 20 A. L. J. 327; 4 U. P. L. R. A person to whom the Liquidator of a Company has transferred a payment order made by the Court under section 150 of the Companies Act, 1982, against a contributory, is entitled to invoke the summary jurisdiction of the Court for the purpose of recovering the money due from the latter; the fact that the Company has been finally dissolved would not prevent the assignee from seeking relief from the Liquidation Court, and render it necessary for him to bring an action for the recovery of the money. L. See PUNJAB PRE-EMPTION ACT, s. 7 71

Compromise by Counsel—Withdrawal by client—Consent order perfected—Court's discretion—Acquiescence by client

Counsel has an apparent authority to compromise in all matters connected with an action and not merely collateral to it and if he acts within his apparent authority and the other party has no notice of any limitation or restriction on that authority, the client will be bound by the agreement made by his Counsel and embodied in some order or judgment of the Court.

In Das, J.—Here a consent is given by a Counsel under some misapprehension as to the wishes of his client, the latter may withdraw it before the consent order is drawn up and perfected, but not afterwards.

The Court has very large discretion in the matter before the order is drawn up. But once the order is actually drawn up and perfected the discretion is at an end.

The mere fact that a consent order is hard is no ground for reviewing it.

Compromise by Counsel—conold.

The Counsel of a party to a suit entered into a compromise agreeing to deposit a certain sum of money in Court under the mistaken belief that he had the permission of his client to do so. The client who was present in Court stood by without making any protest, and even tried to raise up the required sum. Failing, he applied to set aside the consent order after the same had been drawn up and perfected:

Held that the order could not be set aside as not only the application had been made long after the consent order had been perfected but the applicant, in so far as he had tried to raise the sum required had acquiesced in the same. PAT NIRMONI CHAUDHURI v. KEDAR NATH DAGA, 3 P. L. T. 71 96

Surety bond—Personal liability—Document capable of intelligible interpretation—Extrinsic evidence, a misibility of, to affect its meaning

A trading Company took certain advances from a Bank, the plaintiff in the suit, and by way of security the defendants who were Directors of the Company executed a surety bond in the form of a letter addressed to the Bank, the material portion of which ran as follows: "In consideration of your allowing the Company to overdraw sums not exceeding rupees fifty thousand on the security of the said Company demand pro-note in your favour we hereby pledge for the re-payment on demand of the said overdraft." In a suit by the plaintiff to make the defendants personally liable, the defendants contended that they had given the surety bond as Directors of the Company and sought to adduce evidence to prove by reference to other transactions entered into by them that they had not pledged themselves personally:

Held, that the only construction that could be put upon the letter was that the defendants had made themselves personally liable:

(2) that as on the face of it there was no difficulty in giving the letter an intelligible meaning as constituting a personal pledge, no extrinsic evidence was admissible to affect its meaning. P C PANNA LAL v NIHAL CHAND, 26 C. Contract, repudiation of—Deposit—Earnest—Forfeiture.

A purchaser who repudiates the contract on his part forfeits the deposit money and is not entitled to its refund even if the other party has not suffered any loss.

A deposit serves two purposes—if the purchase is carried out it goes against the purchase-money, but its primary purpose is that it is a guarantee that the purchaser means business.

Even when there is no clause in the contract as to forfeiture of the deposit, if the purchaser repudiates the contract he cannot get back the money as the contract has gone off through his default.

In the absence of any specific provision the question whether the deposit is forfeited depends upon the intent of the parties to be collected from the whole instrument.

A deposit is not merely a part-payment but is also an earnest to bind the bargain and creates by the fear of its forfeiture a motive in the payer to perform the rest of the contract. C MANGOBINDA DUTTA v. BAISOGOMAFF 714

s. 62—Contract—Subsequent agreement after breach, validity of—English and Indian Law.

Section 6 of the Contract Act applies even where a subsequent agreement has been come to between the parties after breach of the original contract.

Per Ayling Offg. C J—There is no justification for restricting the operation of section 6 on the mere fact that it would otherwise contravene a somewhat technical rule of English law. Section 6 was admittedly enacted in direct antagonism to English law. Why should not section 6 be accepted on its face meaning in spite of a similar antagonism?

Per Odgers, J.—It is highly improbable that of these two sections, section 62 and section 63, the latter should constitute a clear modification of the English law as to the requirement of consideration, while the former should be held by implication and without any suggestion to that effect in the wording itself to import the highly technical doctrine of accord and satisfaction.

If section 6 were only intended to apply before breach, why does it not say so?

Courts should not engraft on the plain meaning of the provisions of enactments, limitations founded on technical rules of English law and pleading, especially in cases where such limitations are not suited to the conditions prevailing in this country. M K. Payment made under contract, recovery of.

A portion of an occupancy tenancy was mortgaged to one H. for Rs. 410, and the remainder was mortgaged to the landlords for Rs. 820. Plaintiff purchased the mortgagee rights of H. and subsequently purchased the occupancy rights of the tenant. He then applied to the Revenue Authorities for redemption of the mortgage in favour of the landlords and obtained an order directing redemption. In pursuance of this order he deposited Rs. 820 which were paid to the landlords. Subsequently the landlords sued for cancellation of the sale in favour of the plaintiff and obtained a decree whereunder they recovered possession of the tenancy. Plaintiff thereupon sued the landlords for recovery of the amounts which he had paid to H. and to the landlords:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff could not recover the money which he had paid to H.

(2) that under the provisions of section 65 of the Contract Act the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the landlords the money which he had paid to them under the sale which had been declared to be void. L BADLU v. SHEO CHAND, 56 P. L. R. 1922 367

The test to determine the penal nature of the terms of a contract is, whether the terms are unreasonable as a whole and whether in fact they are so unreasonable that the parties never contemplated that they should receive effect.

A stake-holder of a chit fund stands in a special relation to its subscribers by reason of the fact that he alone is liable to each subscriber and there is no liability between the subscribers inter se; and without punctual payments by the individual subscribers the stake-holder cannot discharge his liabilities to the successful bidders as they arise. Such relation justifies stringency in the conditions of payment by subscribers and, in particular, in the rate of interest provided for in cases of default.

Where a successful bidder at a chit fund executes a bond to the stake-holder for an amount representing the sum total of future instalments payable by him which provides that, in default of payment of any instalment, the executant would not only forfeit the dividend, interest and premium but become liable to pay the entire amount immediately with enhanced interest at the rate of 18 per cent. per annum the stipulations are neither unreasonable nor penal.

The waiver by a creditor to enforce the terms of an instalment bond on the falling due of a few instalments does not affect his right to use the coercive measures provided therein in cases of future default. M VAITHINATHA IYER v. Plaintiffs ordered certain goods from defendant which the latter undertook to supply. The correspondence between the parties contained occasional references to the dealer in Japan but there was nothing to show that the plaintiffs were dealing with the latter. There were certain clauses in the indents, however, which provided that as regards the outturn of goods, the defendant was not to be held responsible. Owing to late shipments plaintiffs had to pay a certain amount as surcharge and they sued the defendant for the recovery of that sum:

Held, (1) that there was nothing to show that the defendant was acting only as an agent or a scribe for the dealer in Japan and that, therefore, he was personally liable on the contracts.

Although under section 247 of the Contract Act a minor may be admitted to the benefits of a partnership, and, if so admitted, his share is liable, but where the partnership is based on contract, the privilege conferred by the section does not give him the power to create a firm, that is to say, a partnership based on contract must be in existence before he can be admitted to its benefits, for he cannot be admitted to what does not exist. L. Section 257 of the Contract Act makes it obligatory upon each partner to render true accounts and full information of all things affecting the partnership to any partner or his legal representatives. The occasion for this in a suit for accounts upon dissolution of partnership will, however, arise after the preliminary decree is made. At that stage each partner should be served with the notice contemplated by section 66 of the Indian Evidence Act to produce such accounts and papers as may be in his custody. If he omits to produce the books and the books are proved to be at the time in his custody or under his control, the presumption recognised in Illustration (g) to section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act may be applied. In such circumstances secondary evidence will become admissible and the party who has withheld the document will not be able to use the original document as evidence at a later stage without the consent of the other party or the order of the Court, as provided in section 164 of the Evidence Act. C. Applicability of s. 7—"Absconder," who is—Security required for period longer than one year—

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

Failure to furnish security—Procedure—Appeal—Reference to Sessions Judge.

Action under section 47 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be taken only when a Court has reason to believe that any person against whom a warrant has been issued has absconded or is concealing himself so that such warrant cannot be executed. A person, however, who files a petition against the order issuing the warrant and takes steps to procure an order of a superior Court that he should be allowed to remain on bail after such warrant has been issued, can neither be said to be absconding nor concealing himself.

The provisions of section 123, Criminal Procedure Code, are clear on the point that if security is not furnished and security for a period of more than one year has been ordered, the case must be referred to the Sessions Judge, who alone is empowered to pass orders under that section for the imprisonment of the person who has failed to furnish security.

Obiter.—Though section 46, Criminal Procedure Code, is so worded that an appeal may be preferred under the section to the District Magistrate in every case by any person ordered to give security for good behaviour under section 118 by a Subordinate Magistrate, yet ordinarily it seems that the section is meant for cases in which a reference to the Sessions Judge is not necessary, i.e., where a man has been either ordered to furnish security for one year or having been ordered to furnish security for more than a year has furnished it and wants to appeal. In such cases he would go to the District Magistrate in appeal and there would then be no reference to the Sessions Judge, who could deal with such cases only as a Court of revision. L QAMAR DIN v. Section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies to persons likely to commit a breach of the peace themselves as also to those who merely instigate a breach of the peace or disturbance of public tranquillity by others.

Under section 125, Criminal Procedure Code, a District Magistrate has power to cancel a bond for keeping the peace at any time, if he considers it ought never to have been taken at all, but he cannot alter or modify it. Under sections 406 and 423 of the Code he can alter or modify a bond for good behaviour only.

It is wrong to exclude from consideration direct evidence of specific incidents showing that the person to be bound down behaved as man of violent and aggressive temper. These are relevant to the question whether a man is likely to commit a breach of the peace or not and the evidence concerning those incidents is in no sense evidence of repute. N BAINES v. Where in a proceeding under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code the accused is required to furnish sureties, the mere fact that the surety offered resides at some distance away from the accused and is a young man, is no reason for refusing to accept him, if otherwise he is a fit and proper person to be surety. O EMPEROR v. S. 125—District Magistrate, power of, to cancel a bond for keeping the peace—Grounds for cancellation.

The only ground on which a District Magistrate can cancel a bond for keeping the peace or for good behaviour is that something has supervened since the date of the First Court's order which satisfies the District Magistrate that, in view of the facts since come to light, there is no longer any necessity for keeping the accused person under bond.

A District Magistrate taking action under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot treat an application made under that section as an appeal and reverse the order of the First Class Magistrate on the facts. If he considers the order to be wrong on the merits, he can exercise his revisional powers and submit the record to the High Court. But the cancellation of bonds contemplated by section 125 can only be on the ground that the bonds are no longer necessary. A NIZAMUDDIN KHAN v. MUHAMMAD ZIA-UL-NABI KHAN, 20 A. L. J. 521; 23 Cr. S. 133, proceedings under—Obstruction of public way—Defendant setting up title—Magistrate, jurisdiction of, if ousted—Discretion of Magistrate to require party to assert his claim by civil suit—Power of Magistrate to continue the proceedings on failure to do so—Construction of Statutes.

Where in proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, arising out of an alleged obstruction of a way used by the public, a defendant sets up a claim of right the Magistrate's jurisdiction is not ousted even though he finds that the claim is made in good faith.

Criminal Procedure Code—contd.

If the Magistrate does not consider such a claim of title to be well-founded, though he considers it to be made in good faith, he can, in the exercise of his discretion, allow the defendant a reasonable time to assert his claim by a civil suit and if the latter does not go to the Civil Court within such time or fails there, the Magistrate can continue the proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code.

On its own facts the case of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim, 8 O. W. N. 143; 1 Cr. L. J. 70, was not wrongly decided.

Per Sanderson, C. J.—The rules laid down in English cases should not be taken to bind a Court in construing an Indian Act.

The proper course is, in the first instance, to examine the language of the Statute and to ask what is its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law and not to start with enquiring how the law previously stood, and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a Statute, intended to embody in a Code a particular branch of the law, is to be treated in this fashion, its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated. The purpose of such a Statute surely was that on any point specifically dealt with by it, the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used instead of, as before, roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was, extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions.

Per Teunon, J.—There is no reason why in a codifying enactment such as the Code of Criminal Procedure, the Court should introduce any rule of interpretation borrowed from the English Law.

In proceedings under section 138, Criminal Procedure Code, when a claim of private title is asserted, the good faith or bad faith of the defendant raising this plea is immaterial.

Sub-section (2) of section 133 does not appear to favour the reference of parties to Civil Courts.

Per Richardson, J.—It is wrong in principle for any Court or Judge to impose fetters on the exercise by themselves or others of powers which are left by law to their discretion in each case as it arises. *C. SS. 144 (4), (5), 435, 439—

Revision after expiry of two months—Order prohibiting doing of certain act till decision by Civil Court—Injunction—Jurisdiction—"Alter," meaning of

A High Court will not decline to revise an order, passed under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, after the expiry of two months from the date of the order. It will examine the order to see whether it was passed with or without jurisdiction, and, if in its opinion it is a wrong order, it will express its views about it.

An order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, which is indefinite as to time and which prohibits a party from doing a certain act until the question in dispute is settled by a Civil Court, is in effect a perpetual injunction, and is, therefore, without jurisdiction.

The word "alter" in sub-section (4) of section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, does not mean substituting the name of one party for that of the other. M. MUTHUKUMARASWAMI NADAR v. MUHAMMAD HOWTHER, 37 M. L. T. 144; 15 L. W. 423; 42 M. L. J. 352; (1922) M. W. N. 177; 23 Cr. L. J. 404 500

After he has made an order in writing under sub-section (1) of section 145, the only matter which he has to determine is the question of the possession of the disputed property.

Having regard to the provisions of section 458 (3) of the Criminal Procedure Code the High Court has no power to interfere in revision with an order under section 145 of the Code, even though such order was made without affording the aggrieved party an opportunity of producing evidence, having had no notice that the case would come up on a certain date. *L. Held, that the only question was whether the ends of justice required that there should be a prosecution of the petitioner in respect of the written statement filed on the 18th July 1919 and that on the whole after the lapse of time the ends of justice did not require that there should be a prosecution in respect of what may be spoken of as the petitioner's temporary lapse from probity not persisted in but rather apparently repented of. C. The words "the husband of the woman" in section 199 of the Criminal Procedure Code are simply intended to point to the particular person who has the right to start proceedings in respect of the offences mentioned in the section, and a man does not cease to be "the husband of the woman" within the meaning of that section merely because the marriage tie has been dissolved subsequent to the commission of the offence complained of. In other words, the dissolution of the marriage tie does not take away from the complainant the right to lodge a complaint in respect of an offence committed before the marriage tie was dissolved. L. s. 307—Reference—Verdict of Jury—Reasons for verdict—Sessions Judge to give reasons for his opinion—High Court's duty to consider evidence, etc.—Ground for setting aside verdict of Jury.

The verdict of a Jury must not be lightly disregarded by the High Court. Due weight must be given to it, and whenever it is set aside, it must be upon a very substantial ground and not merely upon the ground that another view of the evidence might have been taken.

In referring a case under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, it is not sufficient for the Sessions Judge to say merely that he believes the evidence of witnesses on whose evidence the Jury has returned a verdict of not guilty; he should give reasons for his opinion in sufficient detail to enable the High Court to appreciate it and to give due weight to it.

On a reference under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, the High Court has to consider the entire evidence in the case and to give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and of the Jury.

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—In making a reference, under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code, disagreeing with the verdict of the Jury, the Sessions Judge should ask for their reasons for the verdict.

Where the question in a case under section 447, Penal Code, is an intricate one dealing with the title and possession of the parties and the evidence led in the case by the parties is not convincing as to the exact location and the identity of the land, a summary trial is not proper and the case should be tried in the ordinary way.

Even in the trial of summons-cases an examination of the accused under section 342 is essential and obligatory and an omission to do so would vitiate the whole trial. Neither sections 263 and 264, nor any other provision in the Chapter for summary trials does away expressly with the requirement of sections 342 and 364 of the Code relating to the examination of the accused.

The plea of the accused under clause (g) of section 263 cannot possibly take the place of his examination under section 342, for the former occurs at the initial stage of the case and the latter after the termination of the prosecution evidence.

Under the procedure laid down for the trial of summons-cases, the accused has no right to postpone the cross-examination of any prosecution witness as in the case of the trial of a warrant case. But if the cross-examination is postponed in accordance with the direction of the Magistrate, the Magistrate is bound to give further opportunity to the accused to cross-examine the witness. Without such a cross-examination, the evidence of the witness is legally inadmissible.

There is nothing in law to prevent a Magistrate from making local inspection, but in order to give an opportunity to the accused to remove any wrong impression created on the mind of the Magistrate, it is fair that a note of the inspection should be placed on the record, and the Magistrate commits a grave irregularity particularly when without placing a note of the inspection on the record, he uses the information gathered locally as substantive evidence in the case.

Section 447, Indian Penal Code, requires it to be affirmatively and positively held that the complainant was in possession of the land in dispute with respect to which the criminal trespass is said to have been committed. PAT PARMESHWAR LALL MITTER v. The High Court will not interfere in a judgment of acquittal unless the lower Court has been perverse in its judgment or taken such unreasonable and distorted conclusions of the facts as to cause a miscarriage of justice.

Per Ross, J.—The mere fact that an inadmissible piece of corroborative evidence was brought on the record, through a technical error, cannot stand in the way of conviction by the High Court.

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—The reason that another Tribunal or other Judge might have arrived at a view other than that formed by the Trial Court is not a reason for disturbing a verdict of acquittal arrived upon a full consideration of the circumstances and evidence in the case. PAT EMPEROR v. Not guilty—Judicial functions—Executive powers—Evidence of character—Admissibility of judgment of acquittal for injuring character of acquitted person.

In a case of extortion against a Police Officer the Trying Magistrate, finding the prosecution evidence as insufficient and unconvincing and the defence evidence as more convincing, recorded a judgment of acquittal but added that his own impression was that the case was “not false” and that it should be entered as “true” in the Police register. The Police Officer sought in revision that that part of the Magistrate’s judgment which cast a slur upon his character and was inconsistent with the verdict of acquittal may be expunged.

Held, (1) that, the order of the Magistrate being a judicial one, the High Court had power to deal with it under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, and that it had also power to deal with it under its general superintendence under the Government of India Act;

(2) that as a judicial order the order objected to was illegal and inconsistent with the judgment of acquittal that as an executive order it had no business to be in a judgment; and that, therefore, whether executive or judicial, it should be expunged from the judgment.

No suggestions of any kind can be made against the accused when a verdict of not guilty is recorded except that of establishing his complete innocence.

Even a judgment of acquittal, merely upon the benefit of doubt being given to the accused by reason of suspicious circumstances in the case of the prosecution is entitled to be regarded as a complete exoneration of the accused.

A Magistrate exercising judicial functions has to divest himself for a moment of his executive powers and has to forget himself that he has to deal with the person before him as an executive authority.

Judgments of acquittal are not admissible in evidence even in a case where the character of the person is directly under enquiry under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure: far less can it be permitted to be used by the Magistrate in this case for the purpose for which he recorded it in his judgment, namely, to throw a slur upon the character of the Sub-Inspector for executive or administrative purposes. PAT BERNARAYAN SINGH v. Where an accused person is only summoned and nothing further is done by a Subordinate Court, the High Court has power to quash the proceedings at that stage if it is apparent that grave injustice would be done if the proceedings were allowed to continue.

Petitioner, who was a candidate for the post of lambardar, made a statement concerning respondent, a rival candidate for the post, that he was not the son of the deceased lambardar but was a pichhlag and lawaris. Respondent filed a complaint against petitioner under section 500 of the Penal Code, in pursuance of which a bailable warrant was issued against the petitioner to appear and answer the charge. Petitioner applied to the Sessions Judge to quash the proceedings and his application being rejected he moved the High Court in revision:

Held, (1) that the High Court had power to interfere in revision and quash the proceedings.

(2) that the words 'pichhlag', and 'lawaris', did not mean illegitimate and were not defamatory;

(3) that even if they had amounted to defamation the case would have been covered by Exception (9) to section 499 of the Penal Code, the allegation having been made by the petitioner in an application made by him bona fide. L. THAKARIA v. PURAN SINGH, 23 CR. L. J. 429 589

s. 476—"Such Court," meaning of—Court of Subordinate Judge, whether permanent Court.

The use of the words "such Court" in section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code makes it clear that the Court empowered to take action under that section is the same Court before which the offence has been committed or under whose notice the offence has been brought in the course of a judicial proceeding.

The Court of a Subordinate Judge is a permanent Court. Therefore, a Subordinate Judge is competent to continue an enquiry under section 476 begun by his predecessor. L. TARA CHAND v. EMPEROR, 23 CR. L. J. 451; 65 P. L. R. 1922 723

s. 514, proceedings under—Civil proceedings—Forfeiture of bond—Prima facie proof of forfeiture, necessity of—Notice to show cause issued on Police report—Evidence on oath taken afterwards—Proceedings, whether vitiated—Prejudice, question of, whether material.

Proceedings under section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code are of the nature of Civil proceedings, in which the provisions laid down in that section must be most carefully observed.

Under section 514 of the Criminal Procedure Code, before issuing an order calling upon a person who is subject to a bond to show cause why he should not forfeit it, the Magistrate is bound to have before him sufficient proof that a good reason exists for making the order and the section requires that the grounds of such proof must be recorded.

Therefore, where a Magistrate calls upon a person subject to a bond to show cause under section 514, Criminal Procedure Code, merely on a Police report and takes evidence on oath after the order is issued, he acts without jurisdiction, and the proceedings must be set aside even though, as a matter of fact, the person is not prejudiced in any way by the procedure adopted. PAT KRISHNA NARAIN SINGH v. The words "try any case" in section 556 of the Criminal Procedure Code are comprehensive enough to include the hearing of an appeal.

Where upon the allegations of an Official Receiver, a District Judge presents a complaint against an insolvent under section 69 (5) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, he is a party to the case, although he has little or nothing to do with the prosecution. Consequently, in the event of the insolvent being convicted, the District Judge would be disqualified, under section 556 of the Criminal Procedure Code, from hearing an appeal against the conviction as Sessions Judge.

The consent of a party concerned cannot affect the absolute disqualification imposed by section 556 of the Criminal Procedure Code. L. MAMUN v. EMPEROR, 23 CR. L. J. 446; 61 P. L. R. 1922 622

Criminal trial—Accused made to point out spot where certain incident occurred—Cross-examination of accused—Procedure.

In a criminal case the accused put forward a defence, the principal incident of which was stated by them to have occurred on a certain spot in the neighbourhood of a village. In order to test the accuracy of the story told by the accused the Magistrate on his own motion took them to the neighbourhood of the village and made them point out the spot in turn. In deciding the case he attached great importance to the fact that they did not all point out the same place. There was no evidence on the record as to what occurred when the Magistrate went to the spot and the Magistrate relied entirely on his own knowledge of the incident.

Held, (1) that in the absence of any evidence regarding this episode it must be totally ignored;

(2) that the conduct of the Magistrate in acting as he did verged dangerously near upon cross-examining the accused. L. NTRA v. EMPEROR, 23 CR. L. J. 431 591

— Alienation by female—Heirs, right of, to challenge alienation—Compromise by female—Declaratory suit by heir and reversioner, maintainability of.

As a general rule no female in possession of immoveable property acquired from her husband, father, grandfather, son or grandson otherwise than as a free and absolute gift can permanently alienate such property, and her sons and heirs have a right to control her dealings with the property.

A suit is maintainable by an heir and reversioner to have it declared that a compromise made by a female will not affect his right to succeed as heir and reversioner. L. JHANDHA v. JIWAN 522

— Alienation by widow—Compromise by husband's collateral—Consideration—Compromise, whether binding on successors of collateral.

When doubtful questions of law or of fact have arisen between two parties and each of them has agreed to waive what he honestly believes to be his lawful claim in whole or in part, the transaction amounts to a compromise, the waiver or abandonment on either side furnishing the consideration, provided, of course, that both parties had equal knowledge of the facts and equal opportunities of ascertaining their rights.

Consequently, where a collateral entitled to object to an alienation enters into a compromise in good faith believing it to be the best in the circumstances and for the protection of the estate, the compromise is binding on his successors-in-interest. L. JAI RAM v. TELU, 1 L. L. J. 133 362

The mere fact that the alienation of an occupancy right was consented to by the landlord does not deprive a reversioner of the right to question it. L. BAGGU v. DANI, 3 L. 69 38

— Alienation—Succession—Sisters, when heirs—Burden of proving that sisters are not heirs—Sisters heirs among Tarar Jats of Chakwal, District Jhelum—Riwaj-i-am not opposed to general custom but not supported by instances, evidentiary, value of.

The onus of proving that sisters are not heirs in the absence of all agnates is on the person who asserts this.

An entry in a riwaj-i-am, when not opposed to general custom, is a strong piece of evidence in support of a custom, even if it is not supported by instances.

Among the Muhammadan Tarar Jats of the Chakwal Tahsil, Jhelum District, sisters are heirs in the absence of all agnates and can, as such, contest the validity of an alienation—in this case a Will—by a widow. L. AHMAD v. BANO, 3 L. 40 629

— Alienation—Will in favour of daughter—Will upheld on suit of testator's brother but daughter's power of alienation declared as restricted by first Court—Appellate Court declaring full powers of alienation—Res judicata—Unnecessary finding—Evidence—Will lost—Property alienated by daughter—Suit by collaterals.

In 1830 a will was made in favour of a daughter. In 1881 it was contested by the testator's brother and upheld by the Trial Court as valid with the further finding that the daughter would not be competent to alienate the property. On appeal by the daughter the lower Appellate Court held that she had full powers of alienation. No appeal was preferred against this decision. The daughter gave away the property and on her death her father's collaterals sued for its possession. The Will in her favour was not forthcoming.

Held, that the decision in the previous suit, although it did not operate as res judicata, was an important piece of evidence, that in the circumstances the validity of the Will could not be questioned and that the daughter took an absolute estate. L. ANWAR KHAN v. NUR KHAN, 2 L. L. J. 668 272

A custom should be universal, reasonable and, with some qualifications, immemorial. A number of instances which have recently occurred are not sufficient to create a custom in a trade: on the contrary, they show that it is entirely a modern idea.

Plaintiff employed the defendants who were grain agents at Hapur to purchase certain grain-pits for him and paid the advance money. The defendants purchased seven grain-pits but before the date of delivery to plaintiff sold four of them to another person. When the date of delivery to plaintiff came, the defendants refused to give delivery even of the remaining three pits, (which the plaintiff was willing to accept) unless the latter also agreed to take delivery of another four grain-pits which were different from those originally purchased for him. Upon this the plaintiff repudiated the entire contract and sued for the return of the advance money. The defendants set up a trade custom in defence of their attitude:

Held, (1) on the evidence that no such custom was established;

(2) that even if the custom be taken to be established it was unreasonable and immoral in the sense that it was likely to lead to gross fraud, as it put an agent into a double capacity where his duty and interest must necessarily conflict and as such was contrary to the general principles of agency and could not be given effect to in a Court of Law. A KISHORI LAL v. Pre-emption—Pana Chhajan, Town Beri, Rohtak District—Proof of existence of custom in neighbouring mohallas only supplementary evidence—Judgment based on compromise, effect of.

The custom of pre-emption does not obtain in Pana Chhajan of the town of Beri in the Rohtak District.

In suits for pre-emption in respect of property situate in a town, however probable and seeming the plaintiffs' case may be, he should never be relieved from the burden of proving the existence of the alleged custom in the special locality in which the property is situated, proof of its existence in neighbouring mohallas being at best only supplementary of the evidence required of the plaintiff.

Instances of the exercise of the right of pre-emption of which the latest is 40 years' old are insufficient to prove the existence of custom.

Obiter.—A judgment based upon a compromise or confession, cannot be placed on the same footing as one in which after contest a custom was held to be proved or negatived. L. RAMJI DAS v. MAM CHAND 953

Proof—Gift—Re-marriage of widow in donee's line—Collaterals of donor, rights of.

Custom must be proved by evidence and Courts cannot deduce the existence of one custom from that of another. It is not the function of a Court to say what a custom ought to be, its duty is confined to enforcing such customs as are shown to exist.

The existence of a custom enabling the descendants of a donor to deprive the widow of the last male holder of the donee's family of her life-estate on her re-marriage cannot be presumed by analogy. A person relying upon such a custom must prove it.

The heirs of a donor may succeed eventually to an estate gifted by their predecessor, but their position is not necessarily the same as that of the heirs to an estate which has descended by succession from a common ancestor. The latter are members of the family of the deceased male holder, the former may not be.

The re-marriage of a widow means something more to the members of the family than to strangers. Such a marriage might seem to the late husband's family equivalent to misconduct while by a donor's descendants it might only be regarded as an excuse for getting possession of the land. L. Succession—Daughters v. collaterals of sixth degree—Burden of proof—Hindu Jats of Ludhiana District—Riwaj-i-am, entry in, value of.

Custom—contd.

Among Hindu Jats of Ludhiana District collaterals of the sixth degree exclude daughters from succession.

Where a collateral is more distantly related than the fifth degree, the initial onus is on him to prove that he excludes the daughters and the more remote the collateral is the more heavily does the onus lie upon him.

In the case of collaterals related in the sixth degree the onus is not a very heavy one. An entry in the riwaj-i-am which says that the collaterals in the sixth degree exclude daughters is not opposed to general custom and is quite sufficient to shift the initial onus from the collateral to the other side. L. Held, that the suit must fail, as the plaintiffs were not competent to deny the legitimacy of K S. L. LACHMAN SINGH v. PARTAP SINGH, 3 L. L. J. 866 937

Succession—Murderer's son, whether can succeed to estate of person murdered—Public policy.

Not only is a murderer himself debarred from succeeding to the property of his victim but the disability extends to all those who claim through and not merely from him.

This principle is based upon public policy and has nothing to do with custom or the personal law of the parties. L. JIND KAUR v. INDAR SINGH, 3 L. O. 23 P. W. R. 1924 526

Succession—Pagwand and Chundawand—Jaswal Rajputs of Mauza Deoli, Tahsil Una, Hoshiarpur District—succession, rule of, test for determining. Jaswal Rajputs of Mauza Deoli, in the Una Tahsil of the Hoshiarpur District, observe the Pagwand rule of succession.

In determining which rule of succession applies to a particular family, the safest guide is the rule which is proved to have been observed in the family. L. NANAK CHAND v. MUNSHI RAM 608

Succession to non-proprietor—Collateral in fourth degree.

In the case of succession to a proprietor any collateral, however remote, would be entitled to succeed in default of a nearer heir, but where the question is one of succession to a non-proprietor remote collaterals are excluded.

Here a collateral of a deceased non-proprietor in the fourth degree claims to succeed to his immoveable property, the onus lies on him to prove that he is entitled to do so by custom. L. SHER JANG v. MUNSHI RAM, 3 L. 33; 22 P. W. R. 1922 964

Custom—consold.

Succession—Sunni Muhammadans—Wajib-ul-arz, construction of—Construction, whether may be influenced by principles of Muhammadan Law—“Qarib,” meaning of.

In a family of Sunni Muhammadans where succession is regulated, not by the Muhammadan Law but by custom as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz, the entry in that document being—“dur hissaz malik mutvaffi ka woh shakhs pawega jo qarib hai,” the word “qarib,” in the absence of words limiting the succession to relatives in the male line only, means that relatives “nearest in degree” succeed, and not those “nearer in degree through the male line.”

Where among Muhammadans it has been proved that inheritance is governed not by the Muhammadan Law but by the custom a Court is not entitled to put a strained or limited interpretation on the words used in defining the custom merely because in some instances, if the words were interpreted in their ordinary sense, succession would not be in accordance with the rule of Muhammadan Law. O NIAMAT ALI v ASHIQ ALI, 9 O. Usage—Burden of proof—Proof—Custom and election to abide by old law.

It is of the essence of special usages, modifying the ordinary law of succession that they should be ancient and invariable; and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence, and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends.

Obiter—In their essential characteristics, custom and an election to abide by the law of the old status differ fundamentally as sources of law. P C MAHOMED IBRAHIM v SHAIKH IBRAHIM, 30 M. L. Easement—Eaves, projection of, over another's land—Title to land, if acquired—Easement if established within 10 years—Injunction, when to be refused.

Where the plaintiff had allowed the defendant's eaves to project and rain-water to be discharged over his land for twenty years, all that the defendant could acquire by prescription would be an easement imposing the burden on the servient tenement of having that projection over it; he could not acquire a title to the plaintiff's land even up to the line of his projections.

A plaintiff is entitled to seek relief by means of an injunction against a party seeking to establish an easement against him within 20 years and his acquiescence would not, as a rule, disentitle him to the grant of an injunction. But where on account of the acquiescence the cost of obeying the injunction would be very much greater than it otherwise would have been, or even prohibitive, the Court ought to refuse it. B. Light and air, obstruction of—Injury—Injunction the rule—Damages the exception—Re-roofing of dominant tenement—Easement not affected.

If the erection of a building completely blocks a window and causes total obstruction of light and air, it is prima facie an injury of a serious character and a mandatory injunction should issue. In such a case, injunction is the rule and damages the exception.

The mere fact that it is possible for the owner of the dominant tenement to neutralise the effect of the obstruction of light by re-arranging or altering his own building is no ground for affording him a money compensation.

If a room has existed for over 20 years, the mere fact that it has been re-roofed recently would not deprive its owner of an easement which had been acquired and the latter is prima facie entitled to be maintained in his enjoyment of the said easement.

The grant of an injunction is purely a matter of discretion, to be exercised in a judicial manner. L. THAKAR DAS v. ABDUL HAMID, 2 L. L. J. 701 288

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 15,Exple 2—"Interruption," meaning of—Acquisition of easement of light and air—Interruption.

Where in the course of acquiring by prescription an easement of light and air for certain windows of a building, the building is burnt down, but the owner begins immediately to re-build it and places windows exactly in the same position as the old ones, he will be regarded as having enjoyed the access of light and air continuously, and will be entitled to protection after twenty years from the first building. Any delay in re-building, however, might be evidence of an intention not to resume the user.

An interruption in user owing to a building being burnt down and having to be re-built is not an interruption within the meaning of Explanation (2) to section 15 of the Easements Act as the interruption in such a case is not owing to the act of some person other than the claimant. B RATANLAL BHOLARAM v. If the plaintiff in an ejectment suit can make out a legal title to land, he is entitled to maintain a suit against the person in actual juridical possession of such land for its recovery without making the person under whom the latter claims to hold, a party to the suit (Kashi v. Sadashira, 21 B. 227, relied upon), and where both the person in actual juridical possession as well as the person under whom he holds the property are defendants in the suit but the plaintiff does not choose to claim any relief as against the latter, the Court is competent to give a decree to the plaintiff for possession only as against the former, i.e., the person in actual juridical possession.

Where in an ejectment suit the plaintiff claims possession of proprietary interest in the property in suit, a Court is competent to give him a decree in respect of the mokarrari interest, although he never claimed possession of that interest. PAT BHAGWATI KUR v. Held, (1) that an equitable mortgage by the deposit of title-deeds was recognised, and could be enforced in the Punjab;

(2) that the suit could proceed without impleading the original mortgagors as defendants; and

(3) that inasmuch as the equitable mortgage by the deposit of title-deeds had been effected before the letter was written and as the letter did not embody the terms of the contract, but was written with the object of being used only as evidence of a fact from which the contract was to be inferred, it did not come within the description in section 17 of the Registration Act, and, therefore, it did not require to be registered to render it admissible. L FIRM MOTI RAM-MOHAN LAL v BHARAT NATIONAL BANK, LD., DELHI, 3 L. Estoppel, principles of—Lease for building purposes—Presumption of permanency

Where the owner of a plot of land by his own act or representation creates or induces in the mind of his tenant a mistaken belief that he has a permanent interest in the land and may safely build thereon and the tenant, relying upon the act or representation so made, treats his interest as permanent and incurs expense in building which he would not otherwise have done, the owner cannot afterwards be heard to deny the truth of that which he represented.

Estoppel may arise by reason of either a declaration, an act or an omission, but in either case there must be an intention on the part of the person, against whom the estoppel operates, to cause or permit a belief in the mind of another. In the case of a mere omission no such intention can well be imputed unless the true facts are known to the person whose omission is in question, but where there is a deliberate declaration or act causing or permitting such belief and inducing another to act upon it, it must be presumed that such declaration or act was intended to have its ordinary and natural effect upon the mind and actions of the other party.

Obiter.—Where a lease has been granted for building purposes and no term is specified in the instrument, if the buildings contemplated or in fact erected are of a permanent nature, the presumption is that the interest granted was a permanent one. But no such presumption can outweigh the actual terms of the lease itself. PAT RALLI v. FORBES, 3 P. L. T. 467; (1922) PAT. 203; 4 U. P. L. R. (PAT.) 43 744

An ex parte rent-decree obtained by a landlord against the heirs of a tenant which is satisfied by payment of the decretal amount is evidence sufficient to show that, at the date of the decree, the heirs were paying rent and occupying the position of tenants.

In a suit by a landlord to eject the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding where the defendant alleges that he is entitled to remain in possession on payment of rent on the ground that he has been in possession for more than 12 years after the abandonment of the tenancy by the previous tenant, an ex parte decree obtained by the landlord against the heirs of the latter within 12 years of the suit is admissible in evidence to show that there was no abandonment of the tenancy at the date of the decree. ANUKUL CHANDRA DHAR v. Evidence Act—contd.

defence, effect of. Prosecution, failure of, to appreciate motive, effect of

Confirmation of an accomplice's evidence does not mean that there should be independent evidence of that which the accomplice relates or his testimony would be unnecessary. The corroboration must be by some other evidence than that of an accomplice. One accomplice's evidence is not corroboration of the testimony of another accomplice. Evidence in corroboration must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms, in some material particular, not only the evidence that the crime has been committed but also that the prisoner committed it. The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged.

The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime.

The High Court has only to see whether there is any corroboration of the accomplice's evidence. Whether it is strong or slender need not be gone into in revision.

The plea that an accused is likely to make in defence has no bearing on the question whether a joint trial may legally be held or not.

The failure of the prosecution to appreciate the motive which actuated the commission of an offence cannot affect the merits of the case, if it is otherwise sufficiently proved. N KISAN RAGHUI v. EMPEROR, 23 CR. L. J. 291 343

The only way of proving a dying declaration is by the evidence of some witness who heard it made, the witness being at liberty to refresh his memory by referring to the note made by him or read over by him at or about the time the statement was made. L KUNJ LAL v. —Executing Court, duty of—Court cannot go behind decree

A Court executing a decree must take the decree as it stands. It has no power to go behind the decree, in other words, it cannot entertain any objection as to the legality or correctness of the decree, the reason being that a decree though it may not be according to law, is binding and conclusive between the parties, if it is not appealed from.

Plaintiff obtained an ex parte decree against defendant. In execution the defendant objected that the decree could not be executed inasmuch as the claim upon which the decree was based had been satisfied by an order of discharge passed in certain insolvency proceedings:

Held, that this objection should have been taken as a defence to the suit and could not be entertained in execution, inasmuch as the executing Court had no power to go behind or question the legality of the decree. L. RAM DAS v. NETTO, 6 P. L. R. 1922 753

Limitation—Judgment-debtors who were described as parties but against whom execution was not asked for, if precluded from showing subsequently that the application was barred by limitation.

A judgment-debtor who was not a party to a previous application for execution of a decree or to any order made upon it is not precluded from showing that the said application was barred by limitation and that, therefore, it was not in accordance with law. C. Sale—Decree set aside—Auction-purchaser, rights of.

A bona fide purchaser, who is not the decree-holder or any person claiming through him, at an auction sale in execution of a valid decree, acquires a valid title to the property purchased by him, which is not affected by the fact that the decree is subsequently set aside at the instance of a party thereto. L TARA CHAND v. A sale of ancestral property by a Civil Court is not void in law. A DALIP NARAIN SINGH v. PARMAOTI BIBI, 17 A. L. J. 9-2; 42 A. 58 931

Ancestral property, sale of—Property described as non-ancestral by judgment-debtor—Suit to set aside sale—Substantial injury.

Where to the knowledge of the judgment-debtor property attached in execution of the decree is treated as non-ancestral and is described as non-ancestral in the written pleading presented by him before the Execution Court that Court is within its jurisdiction in putting up the property for sale. If it turns out that the description was mistaken, a suit to set aside the sale would fail unless it is established that the judgment-debtor has really suffered substantial injury. A BHATELAL CHUNNI LAL v. Several judgment-debtors—Property sold as belonging to one of them—No objection by the rest—Sale confirmed—Execution purchaser, bona fide—Suit for possession by remaining judgment-debtors—Estoppel—Person not party to decree, position of.

Where judgment-debtors allow an execution sale of the whole of their property to proceed without raising any objection of insufficient description or to the effect that part ought to have been sold instead of the whole, the sale cannot afterwards be set aside at their instance on those grounds.

Thus where in execution of a decree against certain persons, their joint property is put up for sale as belonging to one of them and the rest who are present at the sale knowing that the execution purchaser is ignorant of the true state of affairs and has no means of finding out the real facts, stand by and allow the sale to take place and be confirmed without lifting a hand to assert their title, they are estopped afterwards, especially after a lapse of three or four years, to question the sale by a suit for possession.

A person whose property is sold in execution of a decree against another to which he was not a party is not bound by the sale when there is nothing to show that the judgment-debtor was the ostensible owner with his consent, either express or implied. O ABDUL RAZZAQ v. Fire Insurance—Contract of insurance—Contract of indemnity—Contract between insurer and insured—Third party even if mortgagee cannot sue on insurance policy—"Total loss," meaning of—Salvage—Mortgagee, when entitled to benefit of insurance—Prohibitory order, issue of, by telegram.

A contract of insurance is a contract of indemnity. It is a contract by the insurer to indemnify the insured against the loss that he may suffer in certain conditions. It is not a contract to indemnify any other persons, and there is no privity of contract between the insurer and any third party. Therefore, a third party, even if he is a mortgagee of the insured property, cannot sue on the policy unless the right of the insured to sue has been assigned to him by a proper and legal assignment.

A 'total loss' means the destruction of the property or injury to it to such an extent as to render the insurer liable to pay the total sum insured.

When the insured has been indemnified to the full extent for a total loss, any salvage belonging to the insured is presumed, under such circumstances, to have been abandoned, and anything that may remain of the property belongs to the insurers to reimburse themselves so far as they can by selling the salvage for what it will fetch. That is an essential element in a contract of insurance.

Apart from Statute, the mortgagee is not prima facie entitled to the benefit of an insurance effected on the property by the mortgagor. In order to entitle the mortgagee to any claim on the policy there must be a covenant not only to insure but to insure for the benefit of the mortgagee or to apply the policy moneys in reinstatement or otherwise for the benefit of the mortgagee.

Hindu joint trading family—Dayabhaga School—Distinction between ancestral business and one started after ancestor's death—New business started by Karta—Insolvency—Adjudication of adult members—Debt contracted for purposes of new business—Liability of minor's share.

The distinction between an ancestral business and one started after the death of the ancestor, as a source of partnership relations is this that in the one case these relations result by operation of law from a succession on the death of the ancestor to an established business, with its benefits and obligations; while in the other case they rest ultimately on contractual arrangement between the parties.

In a joint trading family governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law, the share of a minor is not liable for debts contracted for the purposes of a new business started by the Karta or manager of the family. On adjudication in insolvency of the adult members of the family, such minor's share does not vest in the Receiver. If, however, any of the new firm's assets get into the possession of the minor, the Receiver is entitled to realise them for the benefit of the general body of creditors, an individual creditor cannot, in any event, realise those assets for his own benefit and without adding the Receiver as a party. P C SANYASI CHARAN MANDAL v. Hindu Law—Adoption—Bombay-Presidency—Widow, right of, to contest adoption made by her husband—Jains—Adoption—Ceremony, nature of

In the Bombay Presidency a Hindu widow is not competent to contest an adoption made by her husband, and is bound to accept all the implications of an adoption made by him valid or invalid.

Per Macleod, C. J.—Amongst Jains an adoption is more a secular than a religious ceremony, and is not looked upon in the same way as amongst the regenerate classes. B CHIMABAI MALGAUDA PATIL v. MALLAPA PATIL, 24 Bom. L. R. 489 654

Hindu Law—cont'd.

Alienation by widow—Compromise decree, whether binding on reversioner—Burden of proof—Reference to Full Bench—Hypothetical questions.

By the Full Bench.—In an action against a Hindu widow on a contract made by the widow, a compromise by which she makes over the estate stands on no different footing from a conveyance by her of the property; and the burden of proving that the compromise is binding on the reversioner is on the alienee.

Per Schwabe, C. J.—By the Hindu Law, a widow in possession of property inherited from her husband has a life-interest with power to alienate for necessities. The reversioners are protected by the rule that if she does alienate the onus is on the alienee to show that the alienation was, in fact, for necessities.

An order of reference to a Full Bench should not ask hypothetical questions or ask the Full Bench, so to speak, to give a dissertation on general principles of law but to do what is quite enough for any Judge to do, to answer the question which directly arises in the case before the Court.

Per Coutts Trotter, J.—Where a widow represents the estate it would be unreasonable to deny her the same discretion to avoid useless litigation as would be vested undeniably in a male manager.

But that must be subject to this qualification that where the obligation sought to be enforced against the estate is one of her own creation, she stands in exactly the same position with regard to the justification of the compromise as she does with regard to that of her original contract, and is clothed with no higher authority and no less degree of responsibility by the accident that she has superadded to her character of a widow in possession that of a litigant.

The rule that a widow, as representing the estate, can effectually settle claims arising out of the acts of others, is a salutary one—ut sit finis litium. But to give her the same power in relation to her own acts would be to make her, as it were, a judge in her own cause.

Per Kumaraswami, J.—In considering the question as to whether a compromise arrived at by the widow is binding on the reversioners, the main consideration is whether the suit or claim against the widow is a suit or claim arising out of a contract or transaction entered into by her husband with strangers who claim against the estate or whether the suit is upon a contract or transaction which is entered into by the widow herself. In the former case there can be little doubt that she represents the estate and a bona fide compromise by her would bind the reversioners. In the latter case there is always the question as to whether she acted in her individual capacity or whether she acted as representing the estate. This question has to be solved in cases where the suit proceeds to trial by the evidence adduced in the case and the findings on the issues. A mere allegation by the plaintiff that the widow acted for the estate or a mere assertion by her that she so acted would not by itself show that she acted in her representative capacity or that the decree is binding on the reversioners.

Hindu Law—contd.

In cases of compromise where the suit is on a contract by the widow or in cases where the cause of action is personal to her, she cannot, by simply consenting to a decree, make that which can only bind her life-interest if the matter rested merely on a contract or conveyance, bar the reversioners. If there was no decree, the onus would clearly be on the alienee to show necessity and the recitals in the document would not by themselves prove necessity.

A widow cannot do what is beyond her legal powers by simply going to Court and filing a compromise petition or consenting to a decree.

A widow's action in alienating her husband's estate for her private debt or for a purpose which under Hindu law would not amount to necessity is beyond her powers, and she cannot take advantage of her representative capacity to validate a purely personal transaction. The interposition of a decree by consent would not make any difference as to the onus of proof in such cases. M NALLA TIRUPATIRAJU v. NANDIKOLLA VENKAYYA, 15 L. W. 395; 30 M. L. T. 181; 42 M. L. "Antecedent debt"—Debt secured by mortgage of joint property, whether antecedent—Son's pious obligation to pay father's debts—Doctrine, whether can be invoked during father's lifetime—Mitakshara—Alienation by co-parcener.

Under Hindu law a debt to be "antecedent" must not only be antecedent to the alienation in time but must have been incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate.

Therefore, a mortgage which is at its date an invalid deed in so far as it purports to encumber the joint family property cannot, on the principle of "antecedent debt," become a just and valid consideration for an alienation by the father of a Hindu joint family.

The doctrine of the "pious obligation" of a Hindu son to pay his father's debts cannot be invoked during the father's lifetime. Thus, the grandson's assets cannot be made liable for his grandfather's debts while the father is alive.

According to the Mitakshara Law, joint family property cannot be the subject of a gift, sale or mortgage by one co-parcener except with the consent, express or implied, of all the other co-parceners. Any deed of gift, sale or mortgage granted by one co-parcener on his own account of or over the joint family property is invalid, the estate is wholly unaffected by it, and stands entirely free of it. P CHET RAM v. and, therefore, if the decree-holder hypothecates joint ancestral property in order to take advantage of the decree, the hypothecation is not binding on the family property as having been made to pay off an antecedent debt.

Manager of trust refusing to act—

Founder's widow taking up management—Appointment by widow of another manager under Will, validity of

A Hindu by a Will created a trust in favour of an idol and appointed a manager for the purpose and assigned to the managers of another temple the right of interfering in case of a breach of trust. The manager appointed by the Will did not take upon himself the duties of that office, whereupon the widow of the founder took possession of the property and continued to manage it till her death; during her lifetime, however, she executed a Will whereby she appointed a relative of hers to succeed to the office of manager in her place. The reversioner of the original donor questioned the power of the widow to make the appointment.

Held, per Walsh, J.—The widow as the heir to her husband could not create an interest beyond her lifetime and consequently had no right to bind a reversioner by appointing a manager to act after her death. No special rights having been bestowed upon her by the original deed of endowment, she had no such right under either Hindu Law or custom.

Per Piggott, J.—Though the widow, as representing the estate of the deceased, could make an appointment to inure beyond her lifetime, she had no right virtually to appoint herself as manager and then to endeavour, by means of a testamentary disposition, to take effect after her death, to continue this management in favour of relatives of her own. A GOSWAMI PURAN LALJI v. The facts necessary to prove legal necessity for the debt may be entirely different from those which may be necessary to prove the necessity for borrowing money at the particular rate of interest, and unless the plea is taken in the pleadings, the only onus which remains on the plaintiff is that of proving that the borrowing of the money was justified by legal necessity. Separation between sons—Arbitration—Mother not party—Maintenance allowed to mother instead of share—Mother, whether bound—Contract—Enforcement by third person deriving benefit—Heir of third person, position of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 37.

In a joint Hindu family consisting of a mother, her son and a grandson by a predeceased son, the last two wishing to separate, referred the matter to arbitration, and under the award which followed, divided the property among themselves, undertaking to contribute equally a certain sum for the maintenance of the mother. The latter did not recognise this arrangement and lived for the rest of her life with her son. On her death, the latter, as the heir to his mother's stridhana, sued the grandson for the arrears of maintenance.

Held, (1) that the mother being entitled to a third share under Hindu law and being no party to the arbitration, was not bound to accept the maintenance allotted to her;

(2) that the mother not being privy to the contract of arbitration could not have brought a suit for the maintenance allowed to her under it;

Mahant—Alienation by Mahant—Suit to set aside—Cause of action—Property, vesting of, in idol and in Mahant, distinction between—Different causes of action—Legal necessity—Direct proof impossible—Recitals in sale-deed, value of—Mahant, whether "trustee."

Hindu Law—contd.

Where property is vested in a juridical person and such property is transferred by a person who is only the representative and manager of that juridical person, such transfer is a direct challenge upon the title of the juridical person, and there is adverse possession to the right of that person from the date of the transfer, and a suit to contest such a transfer must be brought within 12 years from that date. But where the property is vested in the Mahant or shebait, the act of alienation is not a challenge upon the title of the juridical person, though the property may be endowed property, in the sense that its income has to be appropriated to the purposes of the endowment, and there is no adverse possession so long as the person making the alienation is alive, the possession of the alienee becomes adverse when a new title comes into existence which is capable of maintaining a suit and which has not approved of, or acquiesced in, the alienation.

Where in respect of a deed of sale proof of necessity has become almost impossible, the recitals in the deed that there was representation as to the existence of necessity, coupled with such evidence as will establish that the circumstances were such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed the truth of the representation that there was necessity of which the recital is evidence, will be sufficient evidence to support the deed. Pat RAMBUP GIR v. Held, (1) that the recital that the disinherited son would not have the rights of a son after the executant's death referred to rights of a religious character and not to rights in the property;

(2) that the meaning of the document was that the son was to lose all his rights in the father's property from the date of the execution of the document;

Succession—Posthumous son, rights of—Alienation by widow, if binding—Analogy of adopted son—Analogy of family settlement, application of.

The right of succession, under Hindu Law, is a right which vests immediately on the death of the owner of the property and cannot under any circumstances remain in abeyance in expectation of the birth of a preferable heir. To this fundamental rule there is an apparent exception in the case of a child already conceived and in the womb of its mother who will, on his birth, divest the estate of any person with a title inferior to his own who has taken in the meantime.

The title of a posthumous son relates back to the time of the death of his father.

The rights of an after-born son in the case of a disposition of the estate by his mother before his birth should be determined on the analogy of his rights in the event of a partition before his birth. Consequently a posthumous son would not be bound by an alienation by his mother of his paternal estate before his birth.

The analogy of a family settlement being binding on the minors is not applicable to such a case, nor is that of an adopted son's rights to question previous act of the adopting widow.

Obiter dicta.—An unborn child is supposed to be born when it is for its benefit to be so considered but this fiction does not apply when the advantage accrues to third persons.

Hindu Law—contd.

An alienation made by the widow for legal necessity before adoption is valid and will bind the adopted son; but an alienation made without such necessity is good only up to the date of adoption; after that date, the alienee has no power to retain the property as against the adopted son and must deliver it to him. The rights of the adopted son are, for this purpose, deemed to spring into existence at the moment of his adoption and displace the rights of the widow; they do not await the determination of the widow's estate by her death as in the case of reversioners. C KUSUM KUMARI DAS v. A surrender by a widow of her husband's estate is not invalid merely because she bargains for an absolute estate in a portion of the estate for her maintenance, so long as the lands allotted to her for maintenance are not in excess of her requirements for maintenance and the transaction is otherwise fair.

Widow, usufructuary mortgage by—Property let out to tenants—Death of widow—Rents, unrealised, by the mortgagee—Accretions—Presumption.—Construction of document—Mortgage-deed, interpretation of—Hindu widow—Mortgage with personal liability—Liability, whether enforceable after her death—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s 68 (a).

The presumption whether a Hindu widow dealt with the income of her deceased husband's estate as to make it an accretion to the corpus or not, must depend upon the circumstances of every case.

Where a Hindu widow creates a usufructuary mortgage of any property let out to tenants, rents actually fallen due at her death, though remaining unrealised by the mortgagees, cannot be treated as accretions to her husband's estate as in the real sense those rents—being transferred to the mortgagees—must be considered to have been already spent by the widow, thus leaving no doubt as to her intention to treat them as personal property.

Apart from any question of Hindu Law the mortgagees, in such a case, being really the landlords up to the date of the widow's death, rents fallen due during that period must be held to be due to them and not to their successors whoever they may be.

Where a Hindu widow executes a mortgage of property belonging to her husband but declares that the mortgagee would, if and whenever deprived of the same, be entitled to recover the mortgage-money from her personal property, the words are wide enough to include the enforcement of the personal liability even after her death. In a clear contract of this nature it is not necessary to interpret it in the light of the law of mortgages, although that law itself, as laid down in section 68 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, would support this view. O CHHANNU LAL v. Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act (XV of 1856), s. 2, whether includes Hindu widows after conversion.

A Hindu widow after conversion and subsequent re-marriage forfeits her rights to her husband's property.

Section 2 of the Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act (XV of 1856) includes all persons who being Hindus become widows.

The Hindu Widows' Re-marriage Act applies even to those sects of Hindus, in which widow re-marriage is recognised. The Act validates the marriage of a Hindu widow and still deprives her of her property.

Even in the case of those classes of Hindus amongst whom widow re-marriage is recognised, a widow would lose her rights to her husband's property, unless it is established affirmatively, that by custom the recognition of re-marriage carries with it the right to retain the deceased husband's estate. PAT SURAJ JOTE KUR v. Hindu Will—Construction—Provision for worship of family idols—No gift to idols—Shebaitship—Destination of property—Res judicata.

The Will of a Hindu testatrix was addressed to her grandson and directed that out of the income of certain specific property, he should perform the worship of the family idols and that the balance of the income should be divided between the representatives of the three branches of her own family. There was no provision for the worship of the idols after the death of the grandson. On the death of the grandson, administration proceedings were taken and it was decided that out of the produce of the houses belonging to the estate of the testatrix, the worship of the idols should be performed and that the surplus should be paid equally to the three branches of the family. This was adopted in a decree of 1888 to which the respondents' branch was a party.

Held, (1) that there was no gift of the whole property to the idols;

Imperfect partition—O. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), ss. 46, 47—Transfers of holding less than Rs. 100 in value—Registration—Transfer, whether vitiated by fraud—Remedy to set aside transfer.

When two co-proprietors of a village divide up the sir land between them, to hold portions of it separately, they make an imperfect partition of that village, each has a separate patti comprising the sir land he holds in severalty, and the whole of the rest of the village forms what is called a shamilat patti.

The mention in section 47 of Act XI of 1898 (O. P. Tenancy Act) of the provisions of section 49 includes the provisions of both sub-sections (3) and (5) of that section and does not refer to those of sub-section (3) only and that section 47 applies to transfers in which the consideration is above Rs. 100, as well as to those of less value provided no question of fraud arises, which will vitiate any transaction of itself.

The proper remedy of a landlord to set aside a transfer of an occupancy land by a tenant, not vitiated by fraud, is by an application by him under section 47 of the Tenancy Act and not by a civil suit. N CHUNGA PRASAD v. PHULWA. 121

Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), s. 8—

"House property," meaning of—Interpretation of fiscal and taxing Statutes—Occupation of house rent-free, whether "income."

The business premises, built by a Company for their own use as a shop, godown and office and occupied by themselves for carrying on their business there, are not assessable as "house property" under section 8 of the Income Tax Act (VII of 1918).

Per Robinson, C. J.—The expression "house property" conveys the idea of buildings used for residential purposes. The word "house" does not mean any building erected for the use of man and, therefore, does not include all buildings of any description.

It is for the Crown to show that business premises fall within the expression "house property." The Crown seeking to recover the tax, must bring the subject within the letter of the law, otherwise the subject is free, however much within the spirit of the law the case might appear to be. There can be no equitable construction admissible in a fiscal Statute the benefit of the doubt is the right of the subject.

Obiter.—The occupation of a house rent-free is not income.

Per Maung Kin, J.—The ordinary meaning of the word "house" is a building used for human habitation or as the dwelling place of human beings and when it is used with other words, as in "coffee-house," "play-house," "ware-house," the previous word is regarded as the defining prefix indicating a meaning different to the ordinary meaning of the general word "house". The word must, therefore, be construed as a dwelling house unless, reading the Statute as a whole, the context directs a departure from that meaning.

In Statutes of taxation the imposition of a duty must be in plain terms. Such a Statute must be construed strictly and the onus lies upon the Crown to show that the person whom it is sought to tax falls clearly within its operation.

If the person sought to be taxed comes within the letter of the law he must be taxed, however great the hardship may appear to the judicial mind to be. On the other hand, if the Crown seeking to recover the tax, cannot bring the subject within the letter of the law, the subject is free, however apparently within the spirit of the law the case might otherwise appear to be. In other words, if there be admissible, in any Statute, what is called an equitable construction, certainly such a construction is not admissible in a taxing Statute, where simply the words of the Statute must be adhered to.

The benefit of the doubt is the right of the subject. L B MESSRS. HOWE & Co v. SECRETARY OF STATE, 11 L B R 29 781 ss. 31, 32, 33, 34—Agent, who may be—Agent must be in receipt of income—Indian Company, whether an agent of its share-holders resident outside British India.

Six persons, residing out of British India, were share-holders in an Indian Company, the income of which arose and accrued in British India. The profits due to those six share-holders were sent out to them by the Company, which on being assessed on the income of those six share-holders as the agent of the non-resident persons, objected that it could not be so assessed:

Held, per Woodroffe and Greaves, JJ. (Ghose, J. dissenting) that, under the circumstances of the case, the Company was neither an agent for, nor in receipt of income on behalf of, the six non-resident share-holders.

Sections 31 and 34 of the Income Tax Act (VII of 1918) should be read together and not disjointly. The latter section merely defines who may be included as an agent under the former section.

To render an agent liable for income-tax for a person residing out of British India whether section 31 or section 34 be looked at, in either case the former must be in receipt of income on behalf of the latter within the terms of section 31.

Per Ghose, J.—A Company incorporated according to law, is an artificial legal person having an existence separate from its corporators. There is, therefore, no legal impediment to a Company being agent for any of its share-holders. The relation, however, of share-holder and Company is not in itself the relation of principal and agent.

The agent of a non-resident person need not be in receipt of income on behalf of such person. The mere fact of agency is sufficient to make him liable to be assessed in respect of the income of the principal.

Section 31 gives merely an extension of the meaning of the term "agent" as including persons who are treated as such and who may be assessed under section 34 although such persons are not really agents. Section 34 should be read in connection with the preceding section rather than with section 31. Section 34 refers to cases where the non-resident person has no agent in British India appointed by himself and, therefore, it becomes necessary to find a person who should be "deemed to be an agent" only for the purpose of the Income Tax Act.

Section 34, Income Tax Act, was enacted for the purpose of assessing the income of non-resident persons when they have not appointed agents residing in British India who might be assessed under section 31. C IMPERIAL TOBACCO Co. The High Court is not bound to interfere on the revision side even when there is a defect of jurisdiction unless failure of justice has directly resulted from such a defect.

After a final decree has been made, whether or not an appeal has been preferred against the preliminary decree, it is the duty of the party aggrieved by the final decree to prefer an appeal against the final decree and an appeal, therefore, against the preliminary decree, without challenging the final decree cannot be entertained. L GANDA RAM v. Under section 21 of that Act, it is the decision of the Recording Officer which is made binding, and not a mere entry of a person's name in the Settlement Register.

Land acquisition—Principle of assessing compensation—Potential value—Operative effect of special adaptability or future utility—Test.

Tribunals assessing compensation must take into account, not only the present purpose for which the land is acquired, but also any other more beneficial purpose to which in the course of events it might, within a reasonable period, be applied, just as an owner might do if he were bargaining with a purchaser in the market.

The operative effect of special adaptability or future utility must be estimated, not by idle speculation and impractical imagination, but by prudent business considerations such as would weigh with an intending purchaser at the imaginary market which would have ruled, had the land been exposed for sale when it was subjected to compulsory acquisition.

Too much importance must not be attached to evidence of offers in ascertaining the market value of land; but the position is different where the question is, whether there is a market at all for a tract of land for use for a special purpose.

Per Buckland, J.—In assessing the compensation payable enquiry should be made as to what is the market value of the land when laid out in the most lucrative and advantageous way in which the owner could dispose of it. Whether or not the particular way in which it is claimed that the land if so laid out could be disposed to the best advantage to the owner is one appropriate to prevailing conditions is a question of fact to be decided according to the circumstances of each case. C MOHINI MOHAN BANERJEE v. Land Acquisition Act—contd.

The purpose for which land has been acquired is an element for consideration in estimating its value, though under section 24 (1) the Court is precluded from considering the increase of its value likely to arise from the use to which it will be put.

The word "applicant" in section 25 is used to describe the person who puts in a written application under section 18 for having his objection to the Collector's award referred for determination by a Civil Court. He is not necessarily identical with the person who makes a claim after notice under section 9. M GATTINENI PEDA GOPAYYA v. DEPUTY COLLECTOR OF TENALI, 5 L. W. 366; 42 M. L. J. 294; (1922) M. W. S. 54—No further appeal to Privy Council from award—"Award," meaning of—Dispute among persons interested in compensation money is not part of award—Decision of such dispute appealable to Privy Council.

Under the Land Acquisition Act there are two perfectly separate and distinct forms of procedure contemplated. The first is that necessary for fixing the amount of the compensation and this is described as being an award.

When once the award as to the amount has become final, all questions as to fixing of compensation are then at an end; the duty of the Collector in case of dispute as to the relative rights of the persons together entitled to the money is to place the money under the control of the Court, and the parties then can proceed to litigate in the ordinary way to determine what their right and title to the property may be.

The award as constituted by Statute is nothing but an award which states the area of the land, the compensation to be allowed and the apportionment among the persons interested in the land of whose claims the Collector has information, meaning thereby people whose interests are not in dispute, but from the moment when the sum has been deposited in Court under section 31 2, the functions of the award have ceased; and all that is left, is a dispute between interested people as to the extent of their interests. Such dispute forms no part of the award.

From an award under the Land Acquisition Act an appeal lies to the High Court and there is no further appeal to the Privy Council. But a dispute as to the relative rights of the persons interested in the compensation money, fixed by the award, forms no part of the award and the right of appeal to the

In a case between landlord and tenant, to render the possession of the latter adverse to the former, such possession must be actual, visible, exclusive, hostile and continued during the time necessary to create a bar under the Statute of Limitation, because the tenant's possession of land can commence to be adverse only when the title adverse to the landlord is asserted, or the landlord becomes aware of the encroachment. C JOGENDRA NATH SAHA v. Biswi mortgage—Right of redemption, extinction of.

Where land held by a tenant is mortgaged to him by the proprietor in consideration of a sum of money, it is not unusual for the tenant to appropriate a portion of the rent, for which he was originally liable, towards interest due on his loan and to pay the balance to the mortgagor. Biswi is the name usually given in Eastern Oudh to such mortgages of land in sub-tenure. The sum representing the difference between the full rent and the interest of the money advanced, which is still payable to the mortgagor landlord, is called paramsana.

The extinction of the right of redemption of a mortgage of this kind does not destroy the right of the mortgagor or of his successor to claim the paramsana as rent, because the paramsana does not fall within the rights to which the mortgagee is entitled. It is payable to the mortgagor irrespective of the mortgage on account of the extra profits which the mortgagee derives from the occupation of the mortgaged property. A decree for arrears of this paramsana can be executed against the mortgagee tenant even after the landlord has lost the right to redeem the mortgage itself. O SAT DEO v. JAI NATH, 3 O. L. In a suit for excess rent for excess area in respect of a tenancy the finding that there is nothing to show that at the inception of the tenancy rent was settled or that it was understood that rent should be settled by assessment on area, is not sufficient for the disposal of the controversy between the parties. The landlord's case does not depend on his being able to prove what had happened at the inception of the tenancy. If the landlord can show that since the creation of the tenancy rent had been assessed, and that when rent was last assessed the assessment was on the basis of a certain area and that the defendants are in possession of land on which no rent was assessed at the time, then the landlord is entitled to increase of rent. The Court should come to a finding whether or not there has ever been assessment of rent on the basis of area and, if so, whether that area is less than the land found to be held by the tenant at the time of the suit.

It is the duty of a Judge when sitting as a final Court of fact to state clearly in his judgment what his findings are; the High Court sitting in second appeal cannot deduce from casual statements in the judgment, findings of fact which are not clearly expressed. C JOGENDRA KISHORE ROY CHOUHDURY v. Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 7, 105, 105A, 106, 109A—Fair and equitable rent, proceedings for settlement of—Questions as to extent of area and liability to enhancement of rent also decided—Appeal, second, to High Court, competency of.

If in any proceeding under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act questions as to the extent of area and liability to enhancement of rent have been investigated and determined, the order of the Settlement Officer, though in form an order which settles a fair and equitable rent, does in substance embody a decision of a question within the scope of section 105A and, consequently, of section 106. Such a decision is not one merely settling a rent within the meaning of section 109A and is consequently liable to be challenged by way of second appeal to the High Court.

Where the landlord seeks to have the rent of a tenure-holder enhanced under section 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the first point for investigation is whether the rent is liable to enhancement. When this has been made out, the next point for determination is, whether there is a customary rate payable by persons holding similar tenures in the vicinity. It is only when this has been answered in the negative that the rent can be enhanced up to such limit as the Court thinks fair and equitable. C MIDNAPORE ZAMINDARY CO. LTD. v. SRIDHAR MAHATA, 36 O. Grant of waste land—Non-payment of rent until land is cultivated not illegal—Immediate payment of rent not necessary to create tenancy—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885).

There is nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act which prevents the granting of waste land to a tenant with a stipulation that no rent shall be payable until the land is brought under cultivation.

Immediate payment of rent is not an essential factor in the creation of a tenancy. PAT CHATTER KUMARI DEBI v. PRATAPDHUJ SINGH 859

Kabuliyat, construction of—Stipulation making tenant liable for rent in case of encroachments—Landlord, whether precluded from suing for ejectment.

in addition to that comprised in the kabuliyat, the tenant shall be liable to pay additional rent, the intention is not that the tenant is at liberty to annex adjoining land of the landlord, and thereby to create a tenancy in his favour in respect of such land even against the wish of the landlord, the object of the clause is to make the tenant liable to pay additional rent for the additional area if the landlord so desires. The landlord can still elect to treat him as a trespasser and sue him in ejectment. C ABDUL HOSSAIN v. AFSARUDDIN, 24 O. L. J. 481 639

Where a lessor evicts a lessee from a part of the land demised, the entire rent is suspended. But where the lessee, being already in possession of a part, takes a settlement of an entire jote, knowing the excess portion to be in the wrongful possession of a third party, and the lessor never puts any obstruction in the way of the lessee's recovering possession and there is no question of mala fides on the part of the lessor, the entire rent should not be suspended and the lessee is liable to pay proportionate rent in respect of the land in his possession. C NARENDRA CHANDRA LAHIRY v. Where a tenant, contrary to the terms of his lease, sub-lets the premises, and the landlord by notice terminates the tenancy, the sub-lessee is a tenant on sufferance thereafter, and is liable to ejectment at the instance of the landlord.

The term "tenant" in section 9 of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act does not include a sub-tenant. B SUGANCHAND SAVAICHAND v. MOTILAL DURGAPRASAD, 24 BOM. L. R. 154 130

Zamindar, power of, to interpose intermediate holder between himself and his tenant—Power of intermediate holder to realise rent from the tenant.

A Zamindar or tenure-holder who has carved out a tenure or under-tenure, as the case may be, is competent to interpose between himself and his tenant, an intermediate holder who may realise the rent payable to himself by his original tenant.

A landlord who has created a tenancy is still competent to carve out another tenancy from the interest he has reserved and interpose the same between himself and his first tenant, subject to the qualification that he cannot thereby prejudice the position of the first tenant, take away or destroy the value or affect of the prior interest transferred, or, limit its extent or restrain its operation.

The defendants had been tenants under S. for a long series of years in respect of a maurasi mokarari holding. While thus in occupation as tenant, S. granted to the plaintiff a maurasi mokarari lease of a large tract of land inclusive of the defendant's holding:

Lease, construction of—Lease granted for fixed term to lessee and his sons, grandsons and lineage—Lessee dying before fixed term—Collaterals, whether can succeed

A lease was granted of certain premises for forty years to the lessee and his sons, grandsons and lineage. On the death of the lessee before the expiry of the period, the lessor sued to recover the premises. The lessee's sister's sons resisted the claim. The lessor contended that the lease was only to the lessee and his wife and his direct descendants and that the collaterals were excluded:

Held, on the construction of the lease, that it was a lease to the lessee for forty years without any limitation and that, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to possession. B. CHANDMAL KESARMAI v. VISHVANATH BALVANT SOHONI, 24 BOM. L. R. 300 230

— construction of—Lessee's right to build—Boundaries well-defined in the lease—Area in lessee's possession less than that stated in the lease—Encroachment, whether permissible.

The portion of a lease which governed the lessee's right to build was as follows:—"You shall not be competent to make big excavations but you shall be competent to construct pucca wall, pucca privy and pucca plinth of the tin ghur":

Held, that reading the clause as a whole, it was the intention of the parties that the lessee's right to erect permanent structures should be limited to those specified in the condition, and that the condition amounted to a prohibition to build any other structures than those expressly mentioned.

The fact that the amount of land of which a lessee was given possession is less than the area stated in the lease, would give the lessee no right of encroachment beyond the well-defined boundaries given in the lease. C. DINANATH DAS v. GOPAL CHANDRA DAS 90

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 13 (b) (f)—Letter written by Legal Practitioner charging Judicial Officer with racial antipathy—Misconduct—Other reasonable cause.

A Legal Practitioner wrote a letter to a Judicial Officer imputing feelings of racial antipathy to the latter and charging him with allowing such feelings to influence him in passing contrary orders against the Legal Practitioner in cases in which he appeared:

Letters Patent (Cal.), cl. 15—O. der setting aside abatement if "judgment."

A decision setting aside an abatement is a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent and is appealable. C. SARAT CHANDRA SARKAR v. MAIHAR STONE AND LIME CO., LTD., 49 C. 62 917

Letters Patent (Lah.), cl. 10—

"Judgment"—Order when "judgment"—Suit dismissed by Trial Court as barred by limitation—Suit held within limitation by lower Appellate Court and remanded for trial on merits—Appeal against order of remand dismissed by Single Judge of High Court—Letters Patent Appeal—Limitation, whether matter of procedure or of substantive law—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104—Effect of section on appeal under Letters Patent.

In determining whether an order constitutes a "judgment" or not within the meaning of clause 10 of the Letters Patent, the Court must take into consideration the nature of the order and its effect upon the civil proceeding in which it is made. If it puts an end to the proceeding, or, if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the proceeding, then it is a "judgment."

A suit was dismissed by the Trial Court as barred by limitation. The District Judge held that it was not so barred and remanded it for decision on the merits. An appeal against the order of remand was dismissed by a Single Judge of the High Court.

Letters Patent (Lah.)—condold.

Held, that the order of the Single Judge constituted a 'judgment' within the meaning of clause 10 of the Letters Patent.

Obiter dicta—(1) It is not necessary that a decision in order to constitute a 'judgment' must involve an actual decision on the right in controversy between the parties. While a mere formal order or an order merely regulating the procedure cannot be viewed as a 'judgment', it cannot be held that the words 'right' and 'liability' used in the definition of 'judgment' given by Sir Richard Couch in Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company, Limited, 8 B. L. R. 438; 17 W. R. 364, have reference only to the substantive law and not to a matter of procedure.

(2) The determination of the question whether a person is entitled to institute a suit for possession within twelve years from a certain date is a determination of a right, more especially when it involves the determination of the acquisition of a prescriptive right by the person in possession.

(3) The object of the Legislature in enacting sub-section (2) of section 104, Civil Procedure Code, was to make it clear that there was no second appeal under the Code from the orders specified in sub-section (1) of the section. Sub-section 2, was never intended to override the express provisions of the Letters Patent and to take away by implication the right of appeal conferred by those special provisions. L RUDU SINGH v. immovable property within Art. 44 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, and adverse possession of such a right for 12 years would, by the operation of section 28 of the Act, extinguish the rights of the lawful owners.

A profit a prendre in the nature of an easement, which can be acquired by 20 years' enjoyment must be a right which does not exclude the acquisition of similar rights by others or bar the enjoyment of such rights by the lawful owners of the land. It may be either a personal right which is not transferable or one attached to a dominant tenement, as in the case of an easement properly so-called, which also cannot be transferred apart from the transfer of the dominant tenement. An exclusive right to the fishing in a particular locality, as in the case of a several fishery, is both transferable and heritable and is an interest in immovable property and one which can be acquired by 2 years' adverse possession as against the lawful owner.

The question of a right of fishery in all cases must be determined by reference to the nature of the right claimed and proved to have been exercised. If it is a mere right to fish not excluding the lawful owner, it would appear to be an easement within the description of the word in the Limitation Act and can be acquired by 20 years' uninterrupted enjoyment. If it is an exclusive right of fishery it is an interest in immovable property and can be acquired by 2 years' adverse possession involving an ouster of the rightful owner. Such a right contains all the essential elements of property and even if it may properly be described as a profit a prendre it has also the distinctive features of an interest in immovable property. Even if section 26 of the Act should be applicable, this would not bar the operation of Art. 144 and section 28 if the right came under both descriptions. PAT HENRY HILL & Co. v. Sch. I, Art. 120—Declaration, suit for—Successive causes of action—Limitation.

A person is not bound to bring a declaratory suit on any and every possible invasion of his title.

Plaintiff purchased the shamilat appertaining to a certain khata in 1879. In 1893 the shamilat of the village was divided into three plots, and one of these was partitioned, the remaining two being kept undivided. Plaintiff put forward a claim to a share in the plot which was partitioned but his claim was denied and he received no share out of that plot. He, nevertheless, continued in joint possession of the undivided plots of shamilat land and his enjoyment thereof was in no way interfered with. In 1914 fresh partition proceedings were started in respect of these plots, and plaintiff's right to a share in the shamilat was again denied. He now brought a suit for a declaration of his title:

Held, that, although the denial of his title by the defendants in 1895 gave the plaintiff a cause of action, he was not bound to sue for a declaration of his title, inasmuch as he continued in joint possession of the undivided plots of the shamilat land and that the defendants' denial of his title in 1914 gave him a fresh cause of action and his suit was, therefore, within limitation. L. Art. 134—Purchaser from mortgagee of mere mortgagee rights as full proprietary rights, position of—Notice constructive, rule of—Special fact—Burden of proof—Biswi mortgage—Under-proprietary tenure subject to redemption—

Compromise terminating mortgage, effect of—Adverse possession.

A person who purchases a right which he honestly believes to be full proprietary right and which is so described in the deed of sale, can claim the benefit of Art. 134, Indian Limitation Act, even though by the exercise of diligence he might have discovered that his transferor was only a mortgagee. Mere constructive notice without actual knowledge is not sufficient to deprive the purchaser of the benefit of the Article.

It is for the person who asserts that a transaction was something different from what on the face of it it purports to be, to substantiate that assertion, that is to say, a special fact must be proved by the party who relies on it.

Biswi mortgage is something like an under-proprietary tenure but it is subject to the right of redemption.

Though the general principle of law is that no act of the mortgagee can by itself change the character of the possession which was originally acquired yet, where both the parties have treated a mortgage as terminated, the case stands on a different footing.

Therefore, where under a compromise the equity of redemption is released by the mortgagor but the compromise is ineffectual for any defect of registration or otherwise, the possession of the mortgagee would be considered to be adverse from the date when the compromise was entered into. O. Art. 142—"Abandonment or 'discontinuance' of possession," meaning of—Adverse possession by successive trespassers—Continuous trespasses, without privity of title or devolution of interest—Suit for possession by persons claiming under real owner—Cause of action.

'Discontinuance' of possession within the meaning of Art. 142 of the Limitation Act takes place when the person in possession goes out and is followed into possession by another person.

In all cases where the person who was in possession at one time and discontinued possession or was dispossessed seeks to eject a person in possession, he must show that he was in possession within 12 years before the suit.

Time commences to run against the last full owner of property from the date when he was dispossessed and the operation of the law of limitation would not be arrested by the fact that, on his death, he was succeeded by his widow, daughter or mother or any other heir, as the cause of action cannot be prolonged by the mere transfer of title.

In order that the title of the true owner may be barred by the adverse possession of a trespasser or a series of trespassers the possession by them must be continuous, and so long as it is continuous it is immaterial whether they claim through one another or independently; but if a period of time should elapse, however short, after the abandonment of one trespasser who has not been in for the full statutory period and the entry of another the title of the true owner is, as from the time of such abandonment, restored to him without any entry or act done on his part, for the Statute does not apply to a case of a want of actual possession by the true owner, but only to cases where the owner is out of possession and another is in possession for the prescribed time.

Obiter.—Art. 141 of the Limitation Act applies to cases where the last full owner was in possession at the time of his death. M VANNAM RAMAYYA v. KUSURU KOTAMMA, (1922) M. W. N. 132; 33 M. L. T. 143; 42 M. L. J. 319; 45 M. 370

Sch. I, Art. 142—Possession, suit for—Plaintiff dispossessed and out of possession—Burden of proof as to title and possession—Possession—User—Constructive possession—Presumption that in case of conflict of evidence possession goes with title, when arises.

Where the plaintiff while in possession has been dispossessed and is out of possession at the date of suit the onus is upon him to prove that he was in possession and was dispossessed within 12 years of the suit.

In cases coming under Art. 142, although the plaintiffs' title is proved, the onus is not upon the defendant to show that the plaintiff lost his title by adverse possession on the part of the defendant.

It is now firmly settled beyond all probability of controversy that the plaintiff in an action for ejectment must not only prove his title but also his possession within 12 years of the suit.

Where definite evidence of acts of possession is forthcoming there is no difference between the proof of possession in the case of jungle, waste or uncultivated lands and in that of cultivated lands. But whereas in the case of cultivated lands the plaintiff will fail if he does not prove his possession within 12 years, in the case of jungle or waste lands, if he proves his title, there is a presumption in his favour where, having regard to the nature of the land, possession cannot be expected to be proved by acts of actual user and enjoyment. If, however, the plaintiff asserts that he exercised acts of ownership upon the land and adduces evidence in support of such assertion, he cannot, where such evidence is disbelieved by the Court, turn round and rely upon any presumption, because the case set up by him negatives the existence of circumstances which would give rise to the presumption, and is inconsistent with it.

Possession is not necessarily the same thing as actual user. The nature of the possession is to be looked for, and the evidence of its continuance must depend upon the character and condition of the land in dispute.

or otherwise becomes wholly incapable of enjoyment in the usual modes, he is deemed to be in constructive possession until the land emerges out of water and becomes capable of enjoyment in the usual mode and he is actually dispossessed by the defendant. No such presumption, however, arises in the case of a wrong-doer.

In cases where the land is not incapable of enjoyment, but may produce some profit, though trifling in amount and only of occasional occurrence as is often the case with jungle land, it would be unreasonable to look for the same evidence of possession as in the case of a house or a cultivated field. All that can be required is that the plaintiff should show such acts of ownership as are natural under the existing condition of the land, and, in such case, when he has done this his possession is presumed to continue so long as the state of the land remains unchanged unless he is shown to have been dispossessed.

The presumption that in case of conflict of evidence, possession goes with the title, arises only where the evidence is equally strong on both sides and cannot be called in aid to give weight to evidence unworthy of credit any more than if no evidence at all had been given. C RAKHAL CHANDRA GHOSE v. Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution—Application for transfer of decree to incompetent Court, whether according to law—Step-in-aid of execution—“Applying in accordance with law,” meaning of.

An application for the transfer of a decree for execution to another Court is a step-in-aid of execution, but in order to save limitation such an application must also be in accordance with law within the meaning of clause (v) of Art. 182.

An application asking the transfer of a decree to a Court not having pecuniary jurisdiction to try the original suit is not an application in accordance with law and, therefore, cannot save limitation.

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—The term “applying in accordance with law” means applying to the Court to do something in execution which by law that Court is competent to do. It does not mean applying to the Court to do something which either to the decree-holder's direct knowledge in fact or from his presumed knowledge of the law, he must have known the Court was incompetent to do.

The Patna High Court ought to follow a Calcutta ruling unless it is satisfied that the ruling is wrong.

Per Bucknill, J.—An application for transfer is primarily a step which saves limitation. But the transfer in order to be effective must be one which can be properly made by the transferring Court. If that Court is not competent to make the transfer then there is no step in fact taken recognised by law which can save the commencement of the running of the limitation period. PAT AMRIT LAL v. arrears of land revenue—Fraudulent sale—Sale caused by one co-owner—Remaining co-owner's rights; whether lost—Declaratory suit—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

A sale for arrears of land revenue obtained fraudulently must be considered a private sale, inasmuch as it has the appearance of a sale for arrears of revenue but is, in its essence, a private alienation.

A co-owner of land cannot be allowed to use the machinery of the Revenue Sale Law to defraud other co-owners, and if he does so the Civil Courts are competent to declare that the result of his conduct is not to place a fraudulent purchaser in a better position than a buyer at a private sale.

Where one of the co-owners of land causes it to be sold fraudulently for arrears of land revenue and buys it himself in the name of his son at a nominal price, the remaining co-owners are entitled to have it declared by a Civil Court that they have not lost their rights in consequence of the sale, but that all that has been actually sold is the interest of the defaulting co-owner. In such a case the Civil Court is not asked to determine the validity of the revenue sale or to set it aside and, therefore, its jurisdiction to grant the declaration sought for is not ousted. B MA ZA v. Maintenance grant, nature of—Savings, when accretions.

The substance of a maintenance grant is that it is the rents, issues and profits that are alienated and not the immovable properties out of which such rents, issues and profits arise, which remain the property of the grantor and annexed to his estate.

In order that there may be accretion there must be an estate to which the accumulation may accrete. Therefore, where a female is in possession of certain villages not as a Hindu widow, but under a lease granted to her by her husband, she has no estate in the villages, but only a maintenance grant, and her savings or accumulations would vest in her heirs and not follow the properties from which they arose.

The maintainability of a suit for malicious prosecution does not depend on there having been a prosecution in the sense in which the term is used in the Code of Criminal Procedure.

An application for sanction to prosecute is a preliminary or initial stage in a criminal prosecution, and whether it is made, according to law, to a Civil or Criminal Court, it can prove the basis of an action for damages for malicious prosecution. Therefore, an allegation in the plaint in such an action that the defendant maliciously and without just, reasonable or probable cause instituted proceedings for sanction and that the plaintiff was obliged to defend the case is sufficient to disclose a cause of action.

The issue as to reasonable and probable cause cannot be decided until after the plaintiff has adduced evidence in support of the allegations in his plaint. C NORENDRA NATH DEY v. JOTISH CHANDRA PAL

Under section 19 of the Divorce Act, fraud, apart from fraud in obtaining the consent of a party, is not a ground for annulment of marriage.

Where in a suit for the annulment of a marriage under the Divorce Act the only evidence of fraud on the part of the defendant (wife) is that her father knew that, previous to the marriage, she was suffering from syphilis and that he concealed this fact from the plaintiff (husband), this would not amount to 'fraud in obtaining the consent' within the meaning of the words at the end of section 19, and consequently is not a good ground for annulling the marriage.

Though a party to a suit for the annulment of a marriage may be physically fit to consummate the marriage, yet where the consummation is a practical impossibility the Courts will interfere.

Where a husband is unable to consummate his marriage without the very gravest risk to his health and to that of any offspring who might be born of the connection, and this state of things is likely to continue and be permanent, it amounts to impotency on the part of the wife, and the suit of the husband for the annulment of marriage should be decreed. C. Under section 3 (b) of the Wakf Validating Act, it is lawful for a person professing the Mussalman faith to create a wakf for the payment of his debts out of the rents and profits of the property dedicated.

A wakf is not invalidated by reason of the circumstance that the property dedicated was under mortgage and that provision was made in the wakf-nama for the discharge of the mortgage-debt.

Under the Hanafi Law delivery of possession is not a pre-requisite to the validity of a wakf, and even if transmutation of possession is necessary, no formal delivery is essential when the settlor is himself the first mutawalli.

Muhammadan Law—concl.

A Muslim who is in marz-ul-maut or death-illness cannot make a valid disposition of more than one-third of his property, and if he purports to make a wakf in such illness, unless his heirs assent, the wakf will affect only one-third of his estate and will be invalid in respect of the excess; this principle operates, notwithstanding that possession of the entire property dedicated has been delivered to the person nominated mutawalli.

In order to establish the existence of death-illness, there must be at least three conditions with regard to the illness which has caused death, namely, (a) proximate danger of death, so that there is a preponderance of apprehension of death; (b) there must be some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person; and (c) there must be some external indicia, such as inability to attend to ordinary avocations.

Whether or not a particular illness constitutes marz-ul-maut is primarily a question of fact but it may sometimes be a mixed question of law and fact, for instance, where the question arises whether the facts found as to the physical condition of the deceased at the date of execution of the deed constitute the essential elements of a marz-ul-maut as formulated by Muhammadan jurists. C JINJIRA KHATUN v. Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), s. 2— Will, requirements of—Family agreement embodying testamentary instructions—Family agreement, binding nature of—Construction of document— Document to be interpreted as a whole—Interpreta- tion to be consistent.

A Will as defined by section 2 of the Oudh Estates Act is a legal declaration of his intentions by a testator with respect to his estate which he desires to be carried into effect after his death. It has to be in writing and registered in the manner required by law. It need not be in any particular form. It must contain a declaration by the testator of his intention regarding the devolution of his estate after his death.

In all cases the primary duty of a Court is to ascertain the true intention of the testator from an examination of the entire Will. The Court is in fact entitled to put itself into the testator's chair and say what, having regard to the language used in the different clauses when read together, his intention was.

If a consistent interpretation can be placed on all the clauses of a document it should be adopted in preference to any other which might lead to inconsistent results.

A family settlement is binding on the parties thereto because the object of such settlement is the reconciliation of existing differences and the avoidance of future disputes.

Three brothers K., M. and A. entered into a family agreement which recorded that they would have no power to make a gift or Will of their properties in favour of any person other than their children and wives of equal status, (aulad wa azwaj najib-ut-tarfain), that after they died their najib-ut-tarfain children and widows would be their heirs and representatives and that children and widows as were not najib-ut-tarfain would be entitled only to maintenance. But that if any of them died without najib-ut-tarfain issue, then their issue who were not najib-ut-tarfain would inherit. This agreement was duly signed and registered. A died childless and the question was whether the above agreement constituted a Will on the part of A. whether it was binding on all the brothers and if so what interest in A's property was taken by his najib-ut-tarfain widow:

Held, (1) that the agreement constituted a valid Will on the part of A. as it satisfied all the requirements of a Will under section 2 of the Oudh Estates Act to which the parties were subject.

(2) that by the family agreement all the brothers relinquished their rights of succession to each other which they had under the Oudh Estates Act and that the agreement was binding on them as well as on all persons claiming through them;

(3) that under the Will of A. his widow succeeded to his property absolutely with full power to bequeath it to any person she liked. O MUHAMMAD YAQUB KHAN v. MUHAMMAD SHAHID ALI KHAN, 9 O. L. J. 140; 25 O. C. 21 556

A person in whose favour a conveyance is made of the suit properties pendente lite, is not a necessary party to the suit, and if, on his own application, he is joined as a party, and during the pendency of an appeal in the suit he dies, the fact that his heirs are not substituted in his place, is not a defect in the constitution of the appeal. PAT RAMRUP GIR v. Partition—Parties, necessary—Co-owners—Co- sharers—Mortgagee with possession, whether necessary party—Locus standi to object to correctness of partition proceedings—Partition, effect of—Land in possession of one co-sharer before partition allotted to another co-sharer—Adverse possession of co-sharer in possession, when begins.

Only owners and co-sharers are necessary parties to a partition proceeding. A mortgagee with possession is in no sense an owner or a co-sharer and therefore is not a necessary party and consequently has no locus standi to object to the correctness of a partition proceeding.

Whatever may have been the rights of parties to a partition proceeding before the partition of land, the partition creates new rights. Therefore

A customer is generally and to a great extent guided by first impressions of general similarity. Consequently in a suit for injunction against the imitation of a patent medicine, its label and general get-up, the true test is to consider the number of similarities, not to calculate the points of difference. Minor points of distinction here and there which are not likely to attract a customer's eye on first sight, should not be magnified.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 116, 161, 107—Public servant—Illegal gratification—Abetment—Offer—Instigation—Offering money for charities in which public servant interested.

The accused called on C., a Municipal Commissioner, to express acknowledgments for the withdrawal of objections against a building which a cousin of his wished to erect. In the course of the conversation the accused enquired if he should put in a tender for some cement about which the Municipality had advertised, remarking that it was no good putting in a tender unless one had influence. After this the accused said to C. "when shall I see you again." C. replied that there was no need. The accused again said, "shall I see you here or elsewhere." C. said, "what about." Accused said, "about that Rs. 5,000." C. enquired, "what Rs. 5,000." Accused replied, "my cousin wishes to give you Rs. 5,000." C. became suspicious and called a colleague K. who was in the adjoining room and told him that the accused had offered him a bribe. The accused in the presence of the colleague admitted that he offered the money on behalf of his cousin. When asked to leave the office, the accused was profuse in his apologies and reluctantly withdrew. The accused was charged under section 116, Indian Penal Code, for the abetment of an offence under section 161. He stated in his defence that the sum offered was for certain charities in which C. was interested, and that C. did not allow him to make himself clear. As a matter of fact C. was interested in certain charities and had requested many gentlemen to subscribe to them. The accused was acquitted at the trial. The Government appealed:

Held, per Shah, J. (1) that the appeal failed and the accused was rightly acquitted as the conversation did not amount to an offer, nor did it amount to an instigation within the meaning of section 107 of the Indian Penal Code;

(2) that even assuming that the words amounted to an instigation within the meaning of section 107 of the Indian Penal Code the question was whether it was for doing anything which, if done, would be punishable under section 161, Indian Penal Code, but the sum which the cousin was to pay could have reference only to the objections against the building already withdrawn and could not refer to any future act such as the tender with which the cousin had no connection;

(3) that although the explanation of the accused that the sum was meant for charities in which C. was interested was undoubtedly open to criticism, as the inference suggested by what happened at the interview was equivocal and the explanation put forward by the accused was reasonably possible, the theory of innocence could not be said to have been sufficiently negatived by the prosecution;

(4) that no inference could be drawn against the accused from his omission to mention that the sum was meant for charities when C. called in K. and told him that he had been offered a bribe as in such a position some persons may act with coolness while others may not be able to do so.

Per Macleod, C. J.—That the words "my cousin wishes to give you Rs. 5,000," did not legally amount to an offer, but they indicated a state of mind on the part of the cousin that, if asked, he might give the sum, that the words were an instigation stimulating C. towards making an attempt to get the amount and that even if it was assumed that the accused was instigating C. to get the sum for one of his funds, that would amount to no more than a mitigation of the offence since under section 161 gratification was not restricted to pecuniary gratification or to gratification estimable in money.

The distinction between offer and invitation to offer is well-recognised in the law of contract and there is no reason why the same should not be observed in a criminal case if the sole question is whether an offer has been made or not.

[In view of the fact that Shah, J. acquitted the accused, His Lordship refrained from expressing an opinion on the question whether the appeal should be allowed or not.—Ed.] B. EMPEROR v. AMIRUDDIN SALEBHOY, 24 Bom. L. R. 534; 23 Cr. L. J. 466 818

Several persons were convicted under section 147 of the Penal Code of rioting with a view to attacking and obstructing the Police in the discharge of their duties and were also convicted under section 333 of the Code of the substantive offence of so attacking and obstructing them.

Held, that both convictions could not stand and that the conviction under section 147 must be set aside.

Although it has to be presumed under section 114 illustration (e) of the Evidence Act that every official act is properly performed, yet this presumption is hardly sufficient to satisfy a Court that such precautions have been taken at an identification as to render it truly valuable. L. They were convicted of offences under sections 147 and 355 of the Penal Code and separate sentences were awarded in respect of each offence.

Held, that the acts committed by the accused formed part of the same transaction and that, therefore, separate convictions and separate sentences under section 147 and section 355 were illegal. L. KARAM SINGH v. EMPEROR, 23 Cr. L. J. 457 729

An order which does not set forth all the elements of an offence covered by it is, therefore, without jurisdiction. PAT. PARMESHWAR RAI v. EMPEROR, 3 P. L. T. 268; (1922) PAT. 204; 4 U. P. L. R. ss. 366, 394—Abduction—Intention—Inference—Robbery and abduction—Separate convictions.

The intent with which a woman is abducted or kidnapped is more or less a matter of inference.

There may be some cases in which the matter is capable of direct proof, but very generally one has to infer from the circumstances of the case and the subsequent conduct of the accused as to what was the intention with which the kidnapping or the abduction had been brought about. In such cases it is for the accused to explain away the incriminating circumstances and to prove that he had no improper or sinister object in view.

Where a woman going peaceably with her husband on the road is robbed of her ornaments and then carried off to a distant village and is kept confined in a house to which no other person could have access except the accused, the only inference that is possible is that she was carried off with the object that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, and it is for the accused to prove that they had some other object in view.

Where a woman is first robbed of her ornaments and is then carried off, the abduction although immediately following the robbery is no part of that offence, it not being necessary to complete the offence of robbery that the woman should also be abducted. In such a case separate convictions and sentences of the accused under the two offences are right and proper. L CHANDA SINGH v. EMPEROR, 3 L. L. J. 574; 23 Cr. L. J. 459 731

Accused with several other males and females lived in a house as a joint family. During his absence from the house, a locked box containing stolen property was found therein, whose key was produced by accused's wife. Accused was convicted under section 411 of the Penal Code:

Held, that although the possession of a wife would frequently be the possession of the husband, yet this could not be presumed per se in every case; there must be something to connect the husband with the possession more than the mere fact that he is the husband, and that, in this case, the conclusion that the husband was in possession could not be justified. A KHUSHI RAM v. A practically conclusive test of the fraudulent character of a deception for criminal purposes is this: Did the author of the deceit derive any advantage from it which could not have been had if the truth had been known?

Whether an article is or is not "property" within the meaning of section 420, Indian Penal Code does not depend upon its possessing a money or market value. If it has some special value for the person or persons concerned, it is "property," even though its value cannot be measured in money.

A certificate for having passed an examination is "property" within the meaning of section 415, Indian Penal Code.

s. 499—Defamation—Imputations against persons who cannot be identified—Printing unfounded rumours—Good faith—Journalistic duties.

A defamatory statement to be actionable must contain an imputation concerning some particular person or persons whose identity can be established. An imputation against an Association or collection of persons jointly may amount to defamation within the meaning of section 499, Indian Penal Code, but it must be an imputation capable of being brought home to a particular individual or collection of individuals as such.

It is unnecessary that the person whose conduct is called in question should be described by name. It is sufficient if on the evidence it can be shown that the imputation was directed against a particular person or persons who can be identified. The rule is that if the words used contain no reflection upon a particular individual or individuals but may equally well apply to others, although belonging to the same class, an action will not lie.

To publish, without regard to the feelings of those against whom it is directed, every foul rumour that may be reported to him, cannot be justified by any recognised standard of editorial duty, specially in a case where the untruth of the rumour could easily have been established by a few simple enquiries on the spot. Pleadings—Suit for possession of mortgaged property—Mortgage-bond challenged as fraudulent—Fraud not proved—Amendment—Suit, whether can be converted into suit for redemption—Discretion of Court.

In the absence of special circumstances, a suit to recover possession of a plot of land on a declaration that a mortgage-bond was fraudulent, collusive and without consideration, when the case of fraud has failed, cannot be converted into a suit for redemption of the mortgage; but it may be so converted, in the discretion of the Court, if the mortgage is valid and binding and the circumstances of the case permit it.

A plaintiff must ordinarily succeed on the case he has made in the plaint and, unless there are special circumstances, an action instituted for purposes absolutely inconsistent with redemption cannot properly be converted into an action to redeem, as it would in reality amount to the conversion of a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character. C NITYA GOPAL v. In a suit for possession of immoveable property on the allegation that the plaintiff, while in possession of the property was dispossessed by the defendant, if oral evidence of possession is given on both sides but the Court finds some difficulty in arriving at a conclusion upon that evidence, or does not consider the evidence altogether satisfactory, it is not precluded from taking into account the other circumstances, probabilities and presumptions that may arise in the case in regard to possession and title. Non-Muhammadans—Lex loci—Personal law—Non-Muhammadan of Delhi owning property in Bihar—Sale—Right of pre-emption.

The Muhammadan Law of pre-emption exists in certain parts of India as a lex loci where both Muhammadans and non-Muhammadans are entitled under it to claim the right of pre-emption. But nowhere has it been adopted as the personal law of non-Muhammadans, and thus is not carried outside the locality in which it obtains. Therefore, if a non-Muhammadan, who is by custom amenable to the law of pre-emption in a particular locality, is the owner of a property in another locality, where a similar custom exists, he is not amenable to the custom in the new locality, for, although it is a similar custom, it is not the same custom to which he has become amenable by reason of the fact that he is a native of or domiciled in a particular locality. Consequently, a non-Muhammadan of Delhi is not bound by the custom of pre-emption which exists in Bihar, although a custom of pre-emption exists also among non-Muhammadans of Delhi. In other words, the sale of property by a non-Muhammadan in Bihar does not give rise to a right of pre-emption if the vendor is not either a native of or domiciled in Bihar. PAT FAZAL KARIM v. A petition for revision, under section 70 (1) (a) of the Punjab Courts Act XVIII of 1884, was presented to the Chief Court on 20th January 1920. Before the petition came up for admission, that section was repealed by Act I of 1912 but the admitting Judge by a mere inadvertence and probably not having before his mind the Act I of 1912, admitted it as an appeal under clause (1) (b) of the repealed section. At the hearing of the appeal it was objected that as the power of converting a revision into a further appeal had been taken away by the new Act, the order of the Judge was made without authority.

Held, that although the Act of 1912 had taken away from the Chief Court the power of converting a revision into a further appeal, yet under section 40 of the Act of 1884, as amended by the Act of 1912, the petitioner had acquired an independent right of appeal when the appeal was admitted, and that as that right was subsisting on that date, the appeal could be treated as properly admitted under that section. *L JAI CHAND v. Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act (I of 1900), Sch. I, Arts. 1, 2—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144—Suit for possession by heir or reversioner—Object of Punjab Act—Suit barred before accrual of right to sue—Limitation—Particular provision, plaint to determine.

An action to recover possession of ancestral land alienated by a male proprietor subject to the Customary Law of the Punjab is governed by the provisions of the Punjab Limitation (Ancestral Land Alienation) Act, I of 1900, if the death of the alienor, which gives rise to the cause of action for a suit for possession, takes place after the enforcement of the Act.

The whole scheme of the Act makes it clear that the object of the Legislature was to remove an uncertainty about titles to land by compelling the relatives of the male proprietors to impeach their alienations within a limited period, namely, twelve years from one of the dates specified therein. It was intended that the title of the alienee should be immune from attack, if the alienation in his favour was not contested within twelve years from the date mentioned in the third column of the schedule. Art. 2, which deals with a suit for possession, should be read with Art. 1 which prescribes the period of limitation for a suit for a declaratory decree, and the word 'heir' used in the former Article connotes the same person or persons as the expression "son or reversioner" in the latter Article.

The word "heir" denotes a person who succeeds by descent to an estate of inheritance, and it is beyond doubt that as long as a proprietor is living he has no heir. The person impeaching his alienation and seeking a declaratory decree cannot, therefore, be designated by the term "heir" and is consequently described as "son or reversioner." It is only after the death of the proprietor that the "son or reversioner" becomes his heir.

In order to determine whether an action is governed by a particular provision of the Law of Limitation the Court has only to peruse the plaint and to decide whether upon the averments contained therein the claim comes within that provision.

Risk-Note Form H—Contract to carry goods at owner's risk—Loss of goods—Company's liability—Wilful neglect—Proof.

The plaintiff delivered to the defendant Company at Nagpur fifty-seven bales of piece-goods to be conveyed from Nagpur to Amritsar and the defendant Company issued a Railway receipt for the said bales to the plaintiffs. The goods were booked under a Risk-Note in Form H whereby the plaintiffs, in consideration of the consignment being charged for at the special reduced or owner's risk rates, agreed and undertook to hold the Railway Administration and all other Railway Administrations working in connection therewith, and also all other transport agents or carriers employed by them respectively, over whose Railways or by or through whose transport agency or agencies the said goods might be carried in transit, harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration of or damage to all or any of the said consignment from any cause whatever except for a loss of the complete consignment or of one or more complete packages forming part of the same consignment, due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants, transport agents, or carriers employed by them before, during or after transit over the said Railway or other railway lines working in connection therewith or by any other transport agency or agencies employed by them respectively for carriage of the whole or any part of the said consignment, provided that, the term "wilful neglect" should not be held to include fire, robbery from a running train or any unforeseen event or accident. The waggon was sealed and remained for 30 hours in the Nagpur goods yard. The seal bore the description: N.G.P. 8. The goods were carried over the Railway of the defendant Company from Nagpur to Delhi, then over the Railway of the East India Railway Company from Delhi to Umballa, and lastly over the Railway of the North-Western Railway Company from Umballa to Amritsar. The goods arrived at Amritsar and the unloading clerk at Amritsar noticed that the seal on one side bore the inscription N. G. P. in large characters without any figure, and that 3 out of 57 bales were missing. Consequently only fifty-four out of the fifty-seven bales were delivered to the plaintiffs' consignees. Plaintiff sued the defendant Company for damages for loss of the three bales, the defendant admitted the short delivery but denied that the loss was due either to the wilful neglect of the defendant Company or to theft by or to the wilful default of their servants:

Held, that under the circumstances of the case the legitimate inference was that the waggon was broken open at Nagpur where the goods could be disposed of without exciting any suspicion and by persons who could calculate on being free from disturbance for a considerable time and that even if it occurred after the waggon left Nagpur, either some of the defendants' servants were concerned in the theft or the theft occurred owing to the wilful neglect of the defendants' servants.

Held, also, that there being a prima facie case against the defendants it was for them to offer some reasonable explanation in order to escape liability; and that as they failed to offer any explanation they were liable for the damages. B CENTRAL INDIA SPINNING & WEAVING CO. v G I P. Liability for loss of goods—Risk-Notes, Form A and B, effect of—Wilful neglect—Onus—Consignee to set forth particulars constituting neglect—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O VI, r. 2.

A Railway Company becomes a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act of 1872 and are common carriers under the Carriers Act, and would be liable for the loss destruction or deterioration of any consignment either wholly or in part of any goods consigned to them, and they are required to deliver the goods so consigned to the consignee in the condition in which they were consigned to them.

This ordinary liability of a Railway Company under sections 72 to 76 of the Railways Act is intended to be limited by the special agreement between the Company and the consignor embodied in Risk-Notes A and B, and the consideration for limiting the liability of the Company is the reduction of the ordinary tariff rate.

The Railway Company under the Risk-Note is, therefore, liable only for the loss of one or more complete packages due to the wilful neglect of its servants, transport agents or carriers employed by them.

The Risk-Notes A and B fulfil the conditions for rendering a contract valid, and, therefore, the parties are bound by the contract embodied in the Risk-Notes.

The onus of proving wilful neglect and default of the Railway Company and thereby fixing the liability upon it must necessarily rest upon the plaintiff.

A plaintiff, in order to succeed in an action for compensation for the loss or deterioration of the goods consigned to the railway must also set forth all the particulars constituting the wilful neglect or default of the Railway Company, which occasioned the loss or deterioration, as is required by O. VI, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code. Pat G. I. P. Ry. Co. v. JITAN R. M. NIRMAL RAM, 3 P. L. T. 222 664

Where a Sub-Registrar has attested under section 33 (2) of the Registration Act a power-of-attorney, purporting to be executed by a parda-nashin lady, it will be presumed that he was satisfied that it had been voluntarily executed by the lady; but a presumption is only a rule of evidence which throws the onus on the other side; and it is of no avail where there is evidence on the record which would lead the Court to the conclusion that there was not evidence sufficient to satisfy the Registrar that the power-of-attorney was voluntarily executed by the parda-nashin lady.

All powers-of-attorney should be construed strictly.

The power to execute a document carries with it the necessary power to enter into the transaction itself, and, therefore, the power to execute a mortgage carries with it the power to incur any loan.

inquiry to be made by the Special Sub-Registrar, and this officer found that the documents had been duly executed by the alleged executant and directed registration thereof; he also found that the executant had made false statements and applied to the District Registrar for sanction to prosecute him under section 82 (a) of the Registration Act: the District Registrar, after a full inquiry, reversed the order of the Special Sub-Registrar directing registration, and refused to sanction the prosecution of the executant. On revision to the High Court:

Held, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to interfere as the District Registrar had acted as a Revenue Court, and that the proper remedy was to obtain a reversal of the order of the District Registrar by the Board of Revenue, or by a decree of a Civil Court. PAT HARI BUX RAM v. Relationship, question of—Evidence—Tradition

When the question of relationship arises between people among whom accessible records of births and deaths are not maintained, nor are such events preserved in written family memorials, the question must depend for its decision on oral tradition, and though this requires close scrutiny, the tradition ought not to be regarded as weak and unsatisfactory merely because it may in one or two respects fail to satisfy the strict conditions that would be necessary for proving a pedigree where records and documents could be used. P C SABZ ALI KHAN v. Proceedings under Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), operate as res judicata—Principle of res judicata is general—Plea of trifling value for not appealing, not admissible.

A decision of a competent Court in proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act operates as res judicata and the same question cannot be re-opened in a subsequent litigation between the same parties.

It is not competent for a Court, in the case of the same question arising between the same parties, to review a previous decision, no longer open to appeal, given by another court having jurisdiction to try the second case. If the decision was wrong, it ought to have been appealed from in due time. Nor in such circumstances can the interested parties be heard to say that the value of the subject-matter on which the former decision was pronounced was comparatively so trifling that it was not worth their while to appeal from it. If such a plea were admissible, there would be no finality in litigation. The importance of a judicial decision is not to be measured by the pecuniary value of the particular item in dispute.

The principle which prevents the same case being twice litigated is of general application, and is not limited by the specific words of the Code of the Civil Procedure in this respect. P C RAMACHANDRA RAO v. The question whether a transaction is a sale or a mortgage must be determined with reference to the intention of the parties as gathered from the document and the surrounding circumstances.

In 1899, D. executed a deed in respect of certain property in favour of P.: immediate possession was delivered to P.: and the documents of title were also delivered to him: there was a stipulation in the deed that if D. paid the principal amount of the purchase-money within three years from the date of execution of the deed, the property would be given up by P.: there was no mention in the deed of interest to be paid on the principal sum at the time of the re-purchase, but it was provided that in the event of D. not paying the purchase-money within three years, the sale would become absolute. No money was paid within the term limited. In 1916 D. brought a redemption suit and the question was, whether the transaction was a deed of sale with a condition of re-purchase, or a deed of mortgage by conditional sale.

School Master and pupil—Corporal punishment on pupil, right of, extent of—School discipline, breach of—Two smacks, infliction of, not causing injury, whether actionable—Madras Educational Rules, r. 59 A.

A School Master is the delegate of the parent and may for the purpose of correction inflict moderate and reasonable corporal punishment on a pupil.

The Courts, however, should not fail to insist on a close scrutiny of the severity of the chastisement inflicted and its justification.

Rule 59 A of the Madras Educational Rules, 1908 or the similar rule in the Rules of 1901, which refer to cases of moral delinquency and flagrant insubordination should not be construed to prohibit or regulate the petty corrections without which the ordinary discipline of a School cannot be maintained and which, if they are to be effective, must be given immediately.

Where a School Master smacks a pupil on the cheek for making a noise and the smacks cause no injury requiring medical aid or disable the pupil from going home at once, the punishment is such as a parent might expect his child to receive, and is not in excess of the master's legitimate powers of chastisement.

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—If the punishment be administered for the gratification of passion or of rage, or if it be immoderate and excessive in its nature or degree or if it be protracted beyond the child's powers of endurance or with an instrument unfitted for the purpose and calculated to produce danger to life or limb, in all such cases the punishment is excessive, the violence is unlawful.

A School Master cannot escape liability merely on the ground that chastisement administered to a pupil has not left any marks of violence or injury on the pupil's body. The question whether the punishment inflicted is moderate and reasonable is one of fact and Courts in this country will certainly discountenance resort by a School Master to barbarous and inhuman forms of correction. *M. application of—Certificate of publication of Record of Rights, effect of production of—Hindu Law—Joint family estate, impartible, incidents of—Jurisdiction, meaning of—Jurisdiction, want of—Decision when null and void—Documentary evidence, production of; at first hearing—Regulation (III of 1872), object and scope of—Operation of Record of Rights as between members of joint family.

Section 11 of Regulation III of 1872 bars every suit regarding any matter decided by any Settlement Court, except such suits as are brought to contest the finding or record of the Settlement Officer, where only the rights of Zemindars and other proprietors as between themselves are concerned, provided they are brought within 3 years from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights.

The production of a certificate of publication of a Record of Rights by the defendant raises a presumption that there was publication according to the procedure laid down in Regulation III of 1872, throwing the onus on the plaintiff to establish that there was no regular publication of the Record of Rights.

Under Hindu law the impartibility of an estate does not destroy its nature as a joint family property or render it the separate property of the last holder unless there is something equivalent to partition. But at the same time the other members of the family have no such property in it to enable them to challenge an alienation made by the holder of the estate either during his lifetime or after his death.

Jurisdiction means power and authority conferred on a Court to pronounce the sentence of the law or to award the remedies provided by law, upon a state of facts, proved or admitted, referred to the Court for decision and authorised by law to be the subject of investigation or action by that Court and in favour of or against persons who present themselves or who are brought before the Court in some manner sanctioned by law as proper and sufficient.

When want of jurisdiction of a Court is apparent on the face of the record, any judgment rendered by such a Court is null and void, incapable of ratification and subject to collateral impeachment. But a Court has jurisdiction to decide whether it has jurisdiction to entertain the suit and the decision of the Court that it has jurisdiction is final and conclusive in all collateral enquiries. Where, however, the want of jurisdiction is not apparent on the face of the proceedings but the absence of jurisdiction depends on a fact, in the knowledge of a party which he had an opportunity of bringing forward in Court, then, if he does not bring that fact forward but allows the Court to proceed with the judgment, he ought not to be permitted to impeach the jurisdiction of the Court in any collateral proceeding.

Obiter dicta—The Civil Procedure Code compels the parties to produce all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power on which they intend to rely at the first hearing of the suit and provides that such evidence which should have been, but has not been, produced shall not be received at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof. This rule, however, was enacted to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents and since no suspicion can attach to certified copies of public documents, they may be received in evidence though they have not been produced at the first hearing.

The policy of the Legislature in enacting Regulation III of 1872 was to have a complete Record of Rights and interests in land in the Sonthal Parganas and to exclude the jurisdiction of Civil Courts except in certain matters. The Regulation gives no scope for the view that the members of a joint family may allow the name of the karta to be recorded in the Record of Rights and yet claim to have an interest in the estate.

The Record of Rights framed under Regulation III of 1872 operates as between members of a joint Hindu family as completely as between strangers.

Specific performance, whether can be enforced.

Plaintiff brought the present suit to enforce the specific performance of an agreement to let certain premises to him. The agreement ran as follows:—

"We agree to rent to Mr. Haji Shaikh Mahomed Shustary the top floor of our building under construction at Plot No. 3 Ballard Estate for a period of five years and five years' option at a monthly rent of Rs. 1,500 only from the date of the completion of the same subject to the conditions and entering into a regular lease. A deposit of three months' rent amounting to Rs. 4,500 only is paid on signing of this contract." Plaintiff obtained a decree in the Trial Court and on appeal by defendant.

Held, (1) that the document sued on was not a concluded agreement which the Court could direct to be specifically performed, because its terms were too uncertain to be reduced to a formal document, and that the document was merely the result of preliminary negotiations which defined a portion of the terms to appear in the lease as eventually settled, while it left a great many of the terms to be agreed upon thereafter; so that the final agreement between the parties depended on a regular lease which was to be executed;

(2) that the effect of the words "subject to" was to introduce a condition or proviso to the effect that the final agreement between the parties depended on a regular lease to be executed later on.

Obiter:—Where an agreement recites that it is to be subject to "usual conditions," the meaning is that when those conditions came to be recorded, the draftsman would put down the usual covenants to be found in agreements of that nature, and that it would be open to the other side either to alter or add to those conditions, and it would be only when the draft had been finally agreed to that the terms of the lease could be ascertained.

S. 27 (b)—Agreement to sell—Transfer in favour of third person—Specific performance—Burden of proof.

The general principle of clause (b) of section 27 of the Specific Relief Act and its illustration is that from the time of a contract for the sale of land, the vendor, as to the land, becomes a trustee for the vendee; and the vendee, as to the purchase-money, a trustee for the vendor, who has a lien upon the land therefor. And everyone coming in by subsequent and representative title, and every subsequent purchaser from either with notice, becomes subject to the same equities as the party would be to whom he succeeds, or from whom he purchased.

A subsequent transferee who desires to take advantage of the exception contained in clause (b) of section 27 of the Specific Relief Act must prove (a) that he was a purchaser for value, (b) bona fide, and (c) without notice.

One who owns property subject to a charge can, in general, convey no title higher or more free than his own and it lies always on a succeeding owner to make out a case to defeat such a prior charge.

Per Harrison, J.—Where, however, a subsequent transferee proves the payment of consideration in full, and also establishes that he acted in ignorance of the original contract, good faith must be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

• Per Walsh, J.—Suits with regard to trusts relating to public charities must either be brought under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code or they cannot be brought at all.

Per Piggott, J.—The proper view of section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code seems to be that it is intended to be an exhaustive statement of the law applicable to suits based upon any alleged breach of any express or constructive trust, created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature.

A suit asking for relief by way of a declaration regarding the invalidity of an alienation by the trustees of a public trust would seem to be covered by section 92 (1), clause (h) of the Civil Procedure Code. A ALI JAFAR v. FAZAL HUSAIN, 20 A. L. J. 557; 4 U. P. L. R. (A.) 181; 44 A. 822 659

The nature of a document must really be determined with reference to its terms and no general test can be laid down for distinguishing a Protection Note from a formal 'Policy of Sea Insurance'.

It may be that a document may in form appear to be a Protection Note, still if in terms it satisfies the requirements of the definition of "Policy of Sea Insurance" within the meaning of the Stamp Act, it would, for the purposes of that Act, be open to a party to contend that it is a Policy of Sea Insurance.

An unstamped document which otherwise fulfils all the conditions of a 'Policy of Sea Insurance' is admissible in evidence upon payment of the necessary stamp and the penalty prescribed in section 35 (a) of the Stamp Act.

s. 35—Document bearing one anna stamp held to be bond—Deficiency in stamp duty—Document, whether to be taken as unstamped or insufficiently stamped—Fiscal act—Interpretation.

For revenue purposes, a document should not be considered as wholly unstamped, when as a matter of fact it bears a stamp, though of a wrong kind.

So long as the Government has received the value for its stamp, it is immaterial for the purpose of calculating the stamp duty due under the proviso to section 35 of the Stamp Act what is the nature of the stamp that has been used on the document.

The law ought to be interpreted as simply as possible, and when a document is stamped though wrongly and inadequately it is to the ordinary person insufficiently stamped, but not unstamped.

Where a document, intended to be a promissory note, and bearing a one anna stamp, is held to be a bond, for the purpose of calculating the deficiency in stamp the document should not be considered as wholly unstamped but only as insufficiently stamped. L B COLLECTOR OF RANGOON v. s. 61—Partition decree, unstamped—

Validity, whether can be questioned after execution—

Inadmissible document, validity of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152—Alteration of decree six years after enforcement.

The validity of a partition decree which has been executed and acted upon cannot be called in question on the ground of its not being stamped.

Although a document may be inadmissible in evidence, it does not follow that it is invalid.

A decree which has been allowed by the parties to be enforced for six years cannot be altered under section 151, Civil Procedure Code. N BAJE UDABIRAM v. BAJESHWAR

Surety, execution of decree against—Surety's liability co-extensive with that of judgment-debtor—Judgment-debtor's failure to have payments certified—Surety, if affected.

A person who stands surety for a judgment-debtor is bound so long as the judgment-debtor is bound and the latter is bound so long as any payments which he may have made to the decree-holder are not certified to the Court executing the decree.

Where, therefore, such payments are not certified to the Court executing the decree, an application for execution of the decree against the surety is maintainable. C ONKARMAI AGARWALA v. NEITYA GOPAL CHAKI

Surrender—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 86 (b)—Tenant, if can surrender after he had transferred his interest—Mortgage by tenant—Subsequent surrender in favour of landlord, how far operative—Surrender, if wholly invalid—Surrender, whether assignment

A person who has parted with his interest in property, cannot deal with that interest by surrendering it in favour of the landlord and he cannot confer upon the landlord a higher right than he could have passed to any other person by assignment.

A surrender by the tenant after he has dealt with a portion of the holding in favour of another person amounts to no more than an assignment in favour of the landlord. But there is no reason why the landlord should be in a worse position than if the assignee were a third party and why he should not acquire all the interest which was left in the tenant at the date of the surrender. C AMIRADDIN MAHAMAD v. Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6 (a)—Release of reversionary rights in favour of widow in possession—Family arrangement—Estoppel.

A relinquishment deed, which purports to be a transfer of reversionary rights, in favour of a widow in possession of her deceased husband's estate by the brother of her husband, is against the provisions of section 6 (a), of the Transfer of Property Act, and, therefore, cannot vest an absolute estate in the widow. Such a relinquishment deed is not a family arrangement, and nor would it operate as an estoppel, inasmuch as if she alienated the property in her lifetime, she, being in possession as a widow, could dispose of it in any event, while an estoppel could only take effect if she purported to deal with the property relying upon the deed of relinquishment. S DAYARAM PREMJI v. ss. 122, 123, 130—Gift—Oral gift—Proof—Rent arrear and current due—Actionable claim, transfer of.

The rent arrear and current due, being actionable claims, cannot be transferred by word of mouth, a transfer can only be effected by means of an instrument in writing in accordance with the provisions of section 130, Transfer of Property Act.

An oral gift must be proved by satisfactory oral evidence by the person who relies upon such a gift. A mere intention to give does not operate as a gift, there must be (1) a transfer of property and (2) an acceptance by or on behalf of the donee in accordance with sections 122 and 123, Transfer of Property Act.

Under section 123, Transfer of Property Act, the delivery required in the case of gift of moveables is that described in section 90 of the Contract Act.

Trust, breach of—Executor depositing legacy money with Bank—Subsequent withdrawal and misappropriation—Liability of Bank—Notice—Actual and constructive—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 48, 62, application of.

K. died in the year 1900 leaving a Will whereby one J. was appointed executor and trustee and among other legacies, Rs. 50,000 were to be invested in the name of one F. The income was to be accumulated for F.'s benefit and the principal and the income were to be made over to him on his attaining 21 years. J. who took out the Probate deposited with the Bank of Bombay G. P. Notes of the value of Rs. 52,000 which were credited to account No. 1. A corresponding current account was opened to which the interest was to be credited. A power-of-attorney was executed by J. in favour of the Bank and the Probate of the Will was duly registered with the Bank. In May 1911 J. asked for a loan of Rs. 45,000 on the security of Notes for Rs. 52,000. Accordingly a loan account to J. was opened while notes for Rs. 52,000 were debited to account No. 1 and credited to advance account to J. In August J. wrote to the Bank to sell the Notes for Rs. 52,000. The Notes were sold accordingly, the loan account was closed and the balance was transferred to No. 1 current account. F. attained majority on 25th October 1913, and filed this suit against the Bank on 18th October 1918, praying that the Bank might be ordered to make good to him the sale-proceeds of Government paper standing to the credit of account No. 1 together with interest. He submitted that the Bank had notice, actual or constructive, of the trust, that the loan account was commenced 9 years from the date of deposit, that the Bank must have known that the loan was required by J. for his own purposes, that from the lapse of time and other circumstances the Bank was put on enquiry which would have disclosed to them the fact that J. drew the money out of the trust fund for himself, that the Bank had either knowledge or reasonable suspicion that the said G. P. Notes were applied by J. in breach of trust and that Bank derived benefit from the breach:

Held, (1) that on the face of it the Bank was entitled to advance money to J. as executor on securities deposited by him as executor and there would be nothing wrong in their acting on his instructions as executor to sell the securities and credit the loan account with a sum sufficient to square it;

(2) that if it were assumed that J. deposited the Rs. 52,000 to meet the plaintiff's legacy and thereby became a trustee of it and pledged it to secure an advance to himself personally or as executor and the Bank sold the paper to re-pay the advance, only then the question would arise whether the Bank had notice of the trust. But there was nothing to support this view of the case;

(3) that even assuming this view of the case to be right the Bank had no actual notice of the trust;

(4) that the Bank had no constructive notice of the trust, for the mere fact of an account being continued and the investment account having a corresponding current account and this being continued for 9 years would not necessarily put the Bank on enquiry;

(5) that if there was merely a pledge of the securities, then if J. had no title to them as executor and the Bank in good faith delivered them back to him, or according to his instructions, under s. 68 of the Contract Act the Bank would not be responsible to the owners in respect of such delivery;

(6) that assuming everything against the Bank the suit was either one for conversion, or for money had and received to the plaintiff's use, to which Arts. 48 and 62 of the Limitation Act would apply. Consequently it was barred by three years' rule of limitation. BANK OF BOMBAY v. FAZULBHOY EBRAHIM, 24 Bom. L. R. 513 761

Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 77 (c)—Land given for public purpose—Trust—Public purpose, failure of—Trust, extinction of—Land, whether recoverable by donor.

Plaintiff gave a plot of land to a District Board for the purpose of being used as a connecting road to a public garden planted by the District Board; finding that the garden was not a success, the District Board sold the land on which it was planted to a third person, whereupon the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover the land given by him:

Held, that the land was held by the District Board as a trustee for the public and when the fulfilment of the purpose for which the land was given became impossible, the trust was then extinguished under section 77 (c) of the Trusts Act, and on the extinction of the trust the owner of the land was entitled to recover it. L. Vatan—Gudgudi village—Deshpande's lands—Palkhi Inam to vatandar—Appanage of vatan—Village grant—Presumption of occupancy right—Inam and other grants—Presumption—Vatan Inam, nature of, how determined.

The lands in the village of Gudgudi held by the Deshpandes are vatan and not ordinary inams.

Per Macleod, J.—A village granted by a Native Ruler before the British Rule to a vatandar to pay his palkhi expenses is an appanage of the vatan.

A grant of a village by or on behalf of the Crown under the British rule is in law to be presumed to be subject to such rights of occupancy, if any, as the cultivators at the time of the grant may have had.

Per Shah, J.—Inam and other grants imply a grant of the royal share of the revenue and not necessarily the soil unless words suitable to indicate a grant of the soil are used in the document evidencing the grant.

In determining the nature of the Vatan Inam regard should be had to the terms of the Sanad and the nature of the settlement under which the Sanad was issued.

A Palkhi allowance, which is made in favour of the original grantee by a Native Ruler, might not necessarily be part of the remuneration of the office held by the grantee. But it is also possible that it might be an appanage of the office and as such would go with the office. B. TUNGABAI GOPAL DESAI v. KRISHNAJI RAMCHANDRA DESHPANDE, 24 Bom. L. R. 252; 46 B. 741

A suit based on an agreement to re-convey on re-payment of consideration the property, which the defendant had purchased from the plaintiff, is really a suit for specific performance. Will, interpretation of—Construction of document—Absolute estate—Restraint on alienation—Hindu testator—Bequest opposed to Hindu Law.

If in a Will there is an absolute bequest, a restriction as to alienation will fail to have effect.
